MILLER BILL WAS DEFEATED BY A VERY NARROW MARGIN

Commons in Committee of the Whole Discusses it and Finally Decides to Arise and Report Progress.

MAY COME UP AGAIN

Ottawa, April 8.—After one of the most exciting nights witnessed in Parliament for some time, a bare majority of the House of Commons, with a sympathetic side towards the interests of the turf and the sporting instincts of the human race, blocked the bill introduced and ably sponsored by Mr. H. H. Miller to suppress race track gambling. As the matter stands there is still a possibility of a compromise being reached before the end of the session, but with the opponents of the bill insisting upon an amendment which in one respect at least would, if adopted, have the effect of accentuating the bookmaking evil, the chances of any legislation this session having a practical value are remote.

When the bill was taken up yesterday evening, clause by clause, it was evident that a majority of the House was against the measure. The first two clauses were struck out, and then Mr. Miller moved that the committee rise and report progress. The latter part of his motion was at the suggestion of Mr. Fielding. Both Sir Wilfrid Laurier and R. L. Borden voted for the bill.

J. R. Stratton (Peterboro), one of the investigating committee, said public opinion favored the bill. "I honestly believe that the system of horse racing in Ontario can be changed so that racing will continue and that root of all evil, the bookmaker, will be abolished. I am opposed to any compromise," he said.

Hon. A. B. Aylesworth said he preferred Mr. McColl's amendment. He thought it an extraordinary way of getting after the desired object by making an individual liable to criminal prosecution. The average man did not believe in this method, and most people did not think that betting in itself was wrong. Parliament had recently passed a law making a boy, almost a man, who smoked a cigarette guilty of a crime. A Sunday law had been passed to prevent a man doing certain things on the Sabbath. This bill would make it a crime for a man to make a bet with a friend of either sex. Soon they might have a law to make a game of cards a crime, or dancing, or other amusements.

He deprecated this manner of legislation, and was sorry that it should be necessary. He considered that many of these matters would have been better left to the Legislatures, the same as license affairs.

R. L. Borden said there was no doubt but the promoters of the bill had the interests of the country at heart. They were engaged in fighting what was admitted to be a great evil, and required a remedy. Some provisions of the bill were extreme, but some provision in the amendment were not fully satisfactory. The promoters of the bill should have imposed upon the Government the responsibility of the measure, yet they had the extraordinary spectacle of the Minister of Justice declaring the bill, not only extreme, but outrageous. The Government was absolutely abrogating its function. He knew of no parallel to this situation in any Parliament in any English-speaking country.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said Mr. Borden would find the doctrine hard to maintain in this Parliament. A private member had the privilege of introducing legislation. If the bill was of such a character that it was the duty of the Government to take a position upon it, it was also the duty of the Opposition to take a position upon it. This was a question which interested every member of the community. The Premier stated the Government had refused to take up the bill, but members thought they should have an opportunity of expressing their views upon it, when the Government had given them this opportunity it had done all its duty.

Hon. John Haggart said all legislation, private or otherwise, the Government was responsible for. That doctrine had been laid down over and over again by Sir Wilfrid Laurier himself, when a public bill referred to a crime, and the Minister of Justice called it absurd, and laughed at it, the situation was remarkable.

At the evening sitting Mr. Roy (Montmagny) moved that the chairman vacate—a device to further delay the bill. The nays won out, and the debate proceeded.

Mr. McColl moved that section 1 of the bill be struck out, and Mr. Aylesworth spoke briefly, answering criticisms made of his speech in the afternoon. He reiterated that section 1 would get after the individual bettor.

Mr. McColl's motion carried by one vote—yeas 78, nays 77.

Section 2 was then taken up, and Mr. Miller moved an amendment which was intended to make clear the definition of the word "place," as applied to gambling. But Mr. McColl moved that the clause be struck out and Mr. Miller's amendment to safeguard the rights of private individuals to make bets was lost—years 74, nays 87; while Mr. McColl's motion carried—yeas 85, nays 77. Mr. McColl moved his own amendment, the same as the British law, and Mr. Miller said that he and Mr. Lancaster were doing it in the interest and for the gamblers and racing interests. Mr. Lancaster condemned Mr. Miller in a warm speech.

Mr. Turriff defended Mr. Miller, who then moved that the committee rise. This would mean the killing of the bill. Mr. Fielding suggested that the committee report progress, which would leave him a chance to introduce changes in the bill and not kill it altogether, and Mr. Miller accepted the suggestion. After some confusion, the motion to kill the bill was lost, on incident being the Deputy Speaker ruling a motion by the Prime Minister out of order.

Mr Borden asked the Prime Minister if there would be more time devoted to the bill this session.

"If we wish to reach prorogation soon," the Prime Minister said, "the House will have to be satisfied with the two days spent on it at this late time of the session."

And so the debate ended.

EXPLOSION ON THE SEA

Ship Carrying 900 Emigrants, Bound For Portland, Me., Is Badly Wrecked by Explosion Which Kills Child and Injures Many—Crew Forced to Fight Men to Give Boats to Women and Children.

Dover, Eng., April 8.—A terrific explosion occurred early yesterday morning on the British steamer Cairnrona, of Dungennas, which wrecked the women's quarters, killing one child and injuring a number of women and children.

The steamer caught fire and a panic ensued, in which men fought for the possession of the boats and had to be beaten back by the crew to allow the women to be taken off first.

A large number of the passengers were landed here last night, many of them in an exhausted condition. In all 20 persons were seriously, and not less than 50 slightly, injured by the explosion and in the panic that followed it.

The Cairnrona sailed Wednesday from London for Portland, Maine. She carried 900 passengers, for the most part emigrants, and a general cargo.

By good luck the steamers Upland and Kanawha were close at hand when the Cairnrona caught fire and stood by and took off several hundred passengers and landed them here.

Several of the first-class passengers and American cattlemen gave thrilling details of the accident. A number of women, with children in their arms, were sitting on a hatch, when suddenly a violent explosion hurled them to all parts of the deck. Some of them were shockingly injured, and one child was killed. The hatch was blown to fragments.

A terrible panic ensued, the emigrants, mostly Russians, running up and down, screaming and wringing their hands. Their terror was increased by the volume of smoke which poured from the burning hold. The captain and officers made ineffectual efforts to calm them, and then signals of distress were sent up. In the meantime another explosion occurred in the engine room, injuring several of the engineers.

The Kanakha and Upland steamed up quickly and the captain decided to transfer all the passengers. This was accomplished speedily, but was accompanied by scandalous scenes. Scores of men tried to rush the boats, and many of them fought with the women, tearing and dragging them under foot.

The crew battled valiantly against the panic-stricken emigrants, using fists and feet and any weapon they could find. Not a few of the frantic men were felled to the deck before the hysterical, fainting women and children could be gotten to the boats.

In the stampede four persons fell or were pushed into the sea and were rescued with difficulty.

The Kanawha and Upland reached Dover with the rescued passengers late in the afternoon, and the scenes at the landing were piteous. Exhausted by cold and exposure, many of them half famished, and other suffering from injuries, they were brought ashore and supplied with food, clothing and medical attention.

Admiral Prince Louis of Battenburg and the princess, with the British naval officers, lent their assistance. The naval surgeons attended the wounded, many of whom were removed in ambulances to hospitals.

The Prince and Princess of Battenburg had been giving a dinner party, but they broke it up and came ashore with their guests to attend to the wants of the refugees.

The Cairnrona's captain is endeavoring to persuade those of his passengers remaining here to re-embark on his steamer. Several hundred of them took train for London last night.

SBARRETTI STATEMENT.

Ottawa Prelate Explains Roosevelt Controversy at Rome.

Ottawa, April 8.—The following statement is given to the press by Monsignor Sbarretti, the Apostolic delegate:

"In view of the attitude assumed by a certain portion of the press in this country with regard to the recent incident connected with Col. Roosevelt's visit to Rome, I feel it my duty to make a brief statement of facts that will help to enlighten public opinion as to the stand taken by the Holy See.

"The position assumed and maintained, irrespective of persons, by the Vatican authorities, is simply the only one compatible with dignity and self respect. There is involved no question of tolerance or intolerance with regard to religious views, as such, for there are continually being admitted to audience with the holy father non-Catholics of every denomination, and even pagans.

"The attitude of those Methodists in Rome towards the Vatican, their bitter and aggressive antagonism to the Catholic faith, and the Holy See and their misrepresentation and vilification of the holy father, in order to pervert the poor and simple, have imposed the line of action adopted towards them. The violent and fanatical tone of the declaration published broadcast by the press as received from a prominent member of this Methodist proselytizing mission, and the grossly-insulting language quoted from an American leader of that sect, against one of the most distinguished and respected members of the American heirarchy, tend sufficiently to confirm the wisdom and prudence of the action taken in their regard."

Authority Revealed.

London, April 8.—In an autobiographic article in Blackwoods Magazine, Sir Robert Anderson admits authorship of the famous Parnellism and Grime series of articles published in The Times in 1887. Sir Robert was then advisor to the Home Office, and later, during the proceedings of the Parnell Commission, became head of the investigation department of Scotland Yard.

In 1886 Gladstone formed a Parliamentary alliance with Parnell, and proposed a home rule bill, which caused a split in the Liberal party and restored Lord Salisbury to power. The Times sought to discredit home rule before the country by publishing a series of articles in which it tried to connect Parnell with Phoenix Park murders and other assassinations. It published letters alleged to have been written by Parnell, which were proved, before a committee appointed by Parliament, to have been forged by one Pigott.

A Detective's Evidence.

Valleyfield, Que., April 8.—Detective Lapointe gave strong evidence yesterday at the trial of Houle brothers for the murder of Farmer Pelletier.

Witness said that when he brought the two accused men back from the States, they confessed to having been hunting the morning of the murder, and that they had fired several shots. Lapointe also testified that the gun he found in the house of one of the accused fitted exactly when placed in the hole the murderers made in the barn door, through which the fatal shots were fired.

Another witness, named Reid, said that one of the other brothers threatened him this week, and warned him against testifying.

Operator Deserted Wire.

Regina, Sask., April 8—Another case of alleged desertion, from duty on the part of a C.P.R. operator came to light yesterday, when Wm. Voyer, night operator, was arrested. Voyer, it is said, left his key without warning Wednesday night, his post being vacant for 25 minutes while the station agent was being located to take his place.

THE PORT OF MISSING MEN

By MEREDITH NICHOLSON.

COPYRIGHT, 1907, BY THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

As he spoke a carriage rolled into the grounds and came rapidly toward the porte cochere.

"I'm off. Please believe in me—a little."

"You must not go if you are hurt. And you can't run away now. My father and mother are at the door."

There was an instant's respite while the carriage drew up to the veranda steps. She heard the stable boy running out to help with the horses.

"You can't go now. Come in and wait."

There was no time for debate. She flung open the door and swept him past her with a gesture—through the library and beyond into a smaller room used by Judge Claiborne as an office. Armitage sank down on a leather couch as Shirley flung the portieres together with a sharp rattle of the rod rings.

She walked toward the hall door as her father and mother entered from the veranda.

"Ah, Miss Claiborne! Your father and mother picked me up and brought me in out of the rain. Your Storm valley is giving us a taste of its powers."

Chapter XVII

A GENTLEMAN IN HIDING.

MRS. CLAIBORNE excused herself shortly, and Shirley, her father and the ambassador talked to the accompaniment of the shower that drove in great sheets against the house. Shirley was wholly uncomfortable over the turn of affairs. The ambassador would not leave until the storm abated, and meanwhile Armitage must remain where he was. If by any chance he should be discovered in the house, no ordinary excuses would explain away his presence, and as she pondered the matter it was Armitage's plight, his injuries and the dangers that beset him, that was uppermost in her mind. The embarrassment that lay in the affair for herself if Armitage should be found concealed in the house troubled her little. Her heart beat wildly as she realized this, and the look in his eyes and the quick pain that twitched his face at the door haunted her.

The two men were talking of the new order of things in Vienna.

"The trouble is," said the ambassador, "that Austria-Hungary is not a nation, but what Metternich called Italy—a geographical expression. Where there are so many loose ends a strong grasp is necessary to hold them together."

"And a weak hand," suggested Judge Claiborne, "might easily lose or scatter them."

"Precisely. And a man of character and spirit could topple down the cardhouse tomorrow, pick out what he liked and create for himself a new edifice—and a stronger one. I speak frankly. Van Stroebel is out of the way, the new emperor-king is a weakling, and if he should die tonight or tomorrow"—

"Yes. After him, what?"

"After him his scoundrelly cousin Francis, and then a stronger than Von Stroebel might easily fall to hold the disjecta membra of the empire together."

"But there are shadows on the screen," remarked Judge Claiborne. "There was Karl, the mad prince."

"Humph! There was some red blood in him, but he was impossible. He had a taint of democracy, treason, rebellion."

Judge Claiborne laughed.

"I don't like the combination of terms. If treason and rebellion are synonyms of democracy, we Americans are in danger."

"No; you are a miracle—that is the only explanation," replied Marhof.

"But a man like Karl—what if he were to reappear in the world! A little democracy might solve your problem."

"No, thank God, he is out of the way! He was sane enough to take himself off and die."

"But his ghost walks. Not a year ago we heard of him, and he had a son who chose his father's exile. What if Charles Louis, who is without heirs, should die and Karl or his son"—

"In the providence of God they are dead. Impostors gain a little brief notoriety by pretending to be the lost Karl or his son Frederick Augustus, but Von Stroebel satisfied himself that Karl was dead. I am quite sure of it. You know dear Stroebel had a genius for gaining information."

"I have heard as much," and Shirley and the baron smiled at Judge Claiborne's tone.

The storm was diminishing, and Shirley grew more tranquil. Soon the ambassador would leave and she would send Armitage away, but the mention of Stroebel's name rang oddly in her ears, and the curious way in which Armitage and Chauvenet had come into her life awoke new and anxious questions.

"Count von Stroebel was not a democrat, at any rate," she said. "He believed in the divine right and all that."

"So do I, Miss Claiborne. It's all we've got to stand on."

"But suppose a democratic prince were to fall heir to one of the European thrones, insist on giving his crown to the poor and taking his oath in a frock coat, upsetting the old order entirely"—

"He would be a fool, and the people would drag him to the block in a week," declared the baron vigorously.

They pursued the subject in lighter vein a few minutes longer; then the baron rose. Judge Claiborne summoned the waiting carriage from the stable, and the baron drove home.

"I ought to work for an hour on that Danish claims matter," remarked the judge, glancing toward his curtained den.

"You will do nothing of the kind. Night work is not permitted in the valley."

"Thank you. I hoped you would say that, Shirley. I believe I am tired, and now if you will find a magazine for me I'll go to bed. Ring for Thomas to close the house."

"I have a few notes to write. They'll take only a minute, and I'll write them here."

She heard her father's door close, listened to be quite sure that the house was quiet and threw back the curtains. Armitage stepped out into the library.

"You must go! You must go!" she whispered, with deep tensity.

"Yes; I must go. You have been kind. You are most generous."

But she went before him to the hall, waited, listened, for one instant; then threw open the outer door and bade him go. The rain dripped heavily from the eaves, and the cool breath of the freshened air was sweet and stimulating. She was immediately relieved to have him out of the house, but he lingered on the veranda, staring helplessly about.

"I shall go home," he said, but so unsteadily that she looked at him quickly. He carried the cloak flung over his shoulder and in readjusting it dropped it to the floor, and she saw in the light of the door lamps that his arm hung limp at his side and the gray cloth of his sleeve was heavy and dark with blood. With a quick gesture she stooped and picked up the cloak.

"Come, come! This is all very dreadful. You must go to a physician at once."

"My man and horse are waiting for me. The injury is nothing." But she threw the cloak over his shoulders and led the way across the veranda and out upon the walk.

"I do not need the doctor; not now. My man will care for me."

He started through the dark toward the outer wall, as though confused, and she went before him toward the side entrance. He was aware of her quick light step, of the soft rustle of her skirts, of a wish to send her back, which his tongue could not voice, but he knew that it was sweet to follow her leading. At the gate he took his bearings with a new assurance and strength.

"It seems that I always appear to you in some miserable fashion. It is preposterous for me to ask forgiveness. To thank you"—

"Please say nothing at all, but go. Your enemies must not find you here again. You must leave the valley."

"I have a work to do. But it must not touch your life. Your happiness is too much, too sweet to me."

"You must leave the bungalow. I found out today where you are staying. There is a new danger there. The mountain people think you are a revenue officer. I told one of them"—

"Yes?"

"—that you are not. That is enough. Now hurry away. You must find your horse and go."

He bent and kissed her hand.

"You trust me. That is the dearest thing in the world." His voice faltered and broke in a sob, for he was worn and weak, and the mystery of the night and the dark, silent garden wove a spell upon him, and his heart leaped at the touch of his lips upon her fingers. Their figures were only blurs in the dark, and their low tones died instantly, muffled by the night. She opened the gate as he began to promise not to appear before her again in any way to bring her trouble, but her low whisper arrested him.

"Do not let them hurt you again," she said.

"Do not let them hurt you again," she said, and he felt her hand seek his, felt its cool, furtive pressure for a moment, and then she was gone. He heard the house door close a moment later and, gazing across the garden, saw the lights on the veranda flash out.

Chapter XVIII

AN EXCHANGE OF MESSAGES.

"WHO am I?" asked John Armitage soberly.

He tossed the stick of a match into the fireplace, where a pine knot smoldered; drew his pipe into a glow and watched Oscar screw the top on a box of ointment which he had applied to Armitage's arm. The little soldier turned and stood sharply at attention.

"You are Mr. John Armitage, sir. A man's name is what he says it is. It is the rule of the country."

"Thank you, Oscar. Your words reassure me. There have been times lately when I have been in doubt myself. You are a pretty good doctor."

"First aid to the injured. I learned the trick from a hospital steward. If you are not poisoned and do not die you will recover—yes?"

"Thank you, sergeant. You are a consoling spirit, but I assure you on my honor as a gentleman that if I die I shall certainly haunt you. This is the fourth day. Tomorrow I shall throw away the bandage and be quite ready for more trouble."

"It would be better on the fifth."

"The matter is settled. You will now go for the mail, and do take care that no one pots you on the way. Your death would be a positive loss to me, Oscar. And if any one asks how my majesty is—mark, my majesty—pray say that I am quite well and equal to ruling over many kingdoms."

"Yes, sire."

And Armitage roared with laughter as the little man, pausing as he buckled a cartridge belt under his coat, bowed, with a fine mockery of reverence.

"If a man were king he could have a devilish fine time of it, Oscar."

"He could review many troops, and they would not be salutes until the powder cost much money."

"You are mighty right, as we say in Montana, and I'll tell you quite confidentially, sergeant, that if I were out of work and money and needed a job the thought of being king might tempt me. These gentlemen who are trying to stick knives into me think highly of my chances. They may force me into the business." And Armitage rose and kicked the flaring knot.

Oscar drew on his gauntlet with a jerk.

"They killed the great prime minister—yes?"

"They undoubtedly did, Oscar."

"He was a good man; he was a very great man," said Oscar slowly and went quickly out and closed the door softly after him.

The life of the two men in the bungalow was established in a definite routine. Oscar was drilled in habits of observation and attention, and he realized without being told that some serious business was afoot. He knew that Armitage's life had been attempted and that the receipt and dispatch of telegrams was a part of whatever errand had brought his master to the Virginia hills. His occupations were wholly to his liking; there was simple food to eat; there were horses to tend, and his errands abroad were of the nature of scouting and in keeping with one's dignity who had been a soldier. He rose often at night to look abroad, and sometimes he found Armitage walking the veranda or returning from a tramp through the wood. Armitage spent much time studying papers, and once, the day after Armitage submitted his wounded arm to Oscar's care, he had seemed upon the verge of a confidence.

"To save life, to prevent disaster, to do a little good in the world, to do something for Austria—such things are to the soul's credit, Oscar." And then Armitage's mood changed, and he had begun chaffing in a fashion that was beyond Oscar's comprehension.

The little soldier rode over the hills to Lamar station in the waning spring twilight, asked at the telegraph office for messages, stuffed Armitage's mail into his pockets at the postoffice and turned home as the moonlight poured down the slopes and flooded the valleys.

At the gate of the hunting park grounds he bent forward in the saddle to lift the chain that held it, urged his horse inside, bent down to refasten it, and as his fingers clutched the iron a man rose in the shadow of the little lodge and clasped him about the middle. The iron chain swung free and rattled against the post, and the horse snorted with fright, then at a word from Oscar was still. There was the barest second of waiting, in which the long arms tightened and the great body of his assailant hung heavily about him; then he dug spurs into the horse's flanks, and the animal leaped forward, with a snort of rage; jumped out of the path and tore away through the woods.

Oscar's whole strength was taxed to hold his seat as the burly figure thumped against the horse's flanks. He had hoped to shake the man off, but the great arms still clasped him. The situation could not last. Oscar took advantage of the moonlight to choose a spot in which to terminate it. He had his bearings now, and as they crossed an opening in the wood he suddenly loosened his grip on the horse and flung himself backward. His assailant, no longer supported, rolled to the ground, with Oscar on top of him, and the freed horse galloped away toward the stable.

A rough and tumble fight now followed. Oscar's lithe, vigorous body writhed in the grasp of his antagonist, now free, now clasped by giant arms. They saw each other's faces plainly in the clear moonlight, and at breathless pauses in the struggle their eyes maintained the state of war. At one instant, when both men lay with arms interlocked, half lying on their thighs, Oscar hissed in the giant's ear:

And the Servian cursed him in a fierce growl.

"We expected you. You are a bad hand with the knife," grunted Oscar, and, feeling the bellowslike chest beside him expand as though in preparation for a renewal of the fight, he suddenly wrenched himself free of the Servian's grasp, leaped away a dozen paces to the shelter of a great pine and turned, revolver in hand.

"Throw up your hands!" he yelled.

The Servian fired without pausing for aim, the shot ringing out sharply through the wood. Then Oscar discharged his revolver three times in quick succession, and while the discharges were still keen on the air he drew quickly back to a clump of underbrush and crept away a dozen yards to watch events. The Servian, with his eyes fixed upon the tree behind which his adversary had sought shelter, grew anxious and thrust his head forward warily.

Then he heard a sound as of some one running through the wood to the left and behind him, but still the man he had grappled on the horse made no sign. It dawned upon him that the three shots fired in front of him had been a signal, and in alarm he turned toward the gate, but a voice near at hand called loudly, "Oscar!" and repeated the name several times.

Behind the Servian the little soldier answered sharply in English:

"All steady, sir!"

The use of a strange tongue added to the Servian's bewilderment, and he fled toward the gate, with Oscar hard after him. Then Armitage suddenly leaped out of the shadows directly in his path and stopped him with a leveled revolver.

Do You Suffer From Headaches?

There are few people who have never experienced a headache from one cause or another. It effects all ages and both sexes alike, but the female sex is naturally the more effected through the higher nervous development and more delicate organization of the system. Those also of a nervous temperament and studious or sedentary occupation are subject to it.

The presence of headache nearly always tells us that there is another disease which, although we may not be aware of it, is still exerting its baneful influence and perhaps awaiting an opportunity to assert itself plainly.

Burdock Blood Bitters has, for years, been curing all kinds of headaches, and if you will only give it a trial we are sure it will do for you what it has done for thousands of others.

Fraternal Prescription For Nervous Wrecks

(From "Medical Reports.")

Thousands of men, nervous wrecks, have found the following "fraternal prescription" a blessing and a boon. Such men lack aggressiveness, they are timid, nervous, easily discouraged, lacking in self esteem and confidence. They suffer from cold extremities, thin watery blood, nervousness, sleeplessness, frightful dreams, trembling hands and limbs, unsteady gait and an absolute inability to perform the ordinary natural and rational acts or duties such as any healthy normal man can.

A vigorous man works, plays, eats and sleeps always with the keenest enjoyment. The greater his exertions are, the stronger becomes his appetite and slumbers.

The nervous man, seems always tired and worn out. Retiring brings no relief. Sleep brings no refreshment, all because of an abnormal condition of the nervous system, brought about by—well, no matter what—the desire is for relief and freedom with rich, red blood surging through the body supplying the sensitive nerves with all the power of sensation, so that sleep is refreshing, food is delicious, work is play and play is pleasure.

This treatment is thorough, simple and correct. The ingredients are used in filling various prescriptions and can be obtained of any well stocked druggist and mixed at home without embarrassment or questions.

Obtain three ounces of syrup sarsaparilla compound in a six ounce bottle. To this, add one ounce of compound fluid balmwort and let stand two hours. Then add one ounce of tincture cadomene compound (not cardamom), and one ounce of compound essence cardiol. Mix, shake well and take a teaspoonful after each meal and one when retiring until a vigorous, bounding new-health takes hold of the tired, exhausted nerves. Only a few weeks treatment, will astonish, and rejuvenate, because the treatment is the right thing at the right time, and contains no deceptive opiates.

FRASERVILLE NEWS.

Fraserville, Ont., April 5.—The sidewalk from the parsonage to the G. T.R. station is now completed.

The valuable Jersey cow owned by Mr. R. Delahay, of this village, died on Thursday last. The number of domestic animals which have died in this vicinity this season is astonishing.

The usual weekly choir practice was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Kidd on Thursday evening last. The large number which turned out was very encouraging.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Farrer, Lakefield, have moved to the village and spent their first few days with Mr Benj. Johnston.

April 1st passed very quietly in the village, despite the fact that many practical jokes were played.

The roads in this vicinity are reported in good shape now for either motoring or cycling.

The fact that a death penalty was imposed on Robert Henderson for the murder near Norwood, caused quite a sensation in the neighbourhood.

Spring work on the farm has commenced in earnest all over this section of the country.

Mr. Wm. Cruickshank spent Sunday visiting friends in Peterborough.

Mr. Joseph Hopkins intends moving to Peterborough as soon as possible. Mr. Elsworth Jewel, of Apsley, has rented his farm, formerly occupied by Mr. Hopkins.

WALKS IN SLEEP FROM SPEEDING TRAIN---NOT HURT

Montreal, April 4th.—There arrived at Windsor station by the Sherbrooke local train at noon to-day Henry Ferguson, aged fourteen, a native of Sheffield, England, bound for Toronto. He is the hero of the most extraordinary adventure that has ever happened on the Canadian Pacific Railway.

He came to Halifax on the Corsican and was being brought through by an immigrant special which passed through the Eastern Townships late Saturday and early Sunday morning, and within a mile of East Stukeley, while the train was travelling at the rate of between forty and fifty miles an hour, he rose in his sleep from his upper berth in a colonist car, dressed only in his shirt and trousers, in which he had gone to bed, and descending in a state of somnambulism, jumped on the side of the track without being seen by anybody.

He was travelling with two Englishmen named Ernest Pillman and H. Goldney Gibson, now staying at the St. James' Hotel, who had promised his relatives to look after him during the trip, as they had all been engaged for employment in Ontario through a labour agency in Toronto. When the train arrived in Montreal about three o'clock on Sunday morning there was consternation on board. "The boy, oh, where was he?" When his guardians for the journey discovered the boy's berth was empty and his clothing was all there—every article down to his stockings and shoes and up to his collar and cap, they were dumbfounded. It is true the trousers he had worn on the Saturday were not with the rest of his clothing, but another pair were on the rack and that deepened the mystery.

Nothing But Mystery.

It was inconceivable that he had been spirited away, and the generally happy disposition of the boy on the trip precluded the idea of suicide. All that was known for certain was that there had been a mysterious disappearance and nobody knew what to think.

The wires were at work at every station between Montreal and Halifax and strict watch on the St. Lawrence bridge and river was enjoined, as it was thought possible that, awaking in the bright light of a delightful early morning, he might have been fascinated by the water and have got out of his berth and walked into the rear or front of the car and fallen on the bridge or even into the river.

The young immigrant who caused all this commotion walked into South Stukeley station in a slightly dazed condition about five o'clock Sunday morning and was there seen by the agent who had been aroused by the telegraph mesage that had by that time been received at every station between Montreal and St. John.

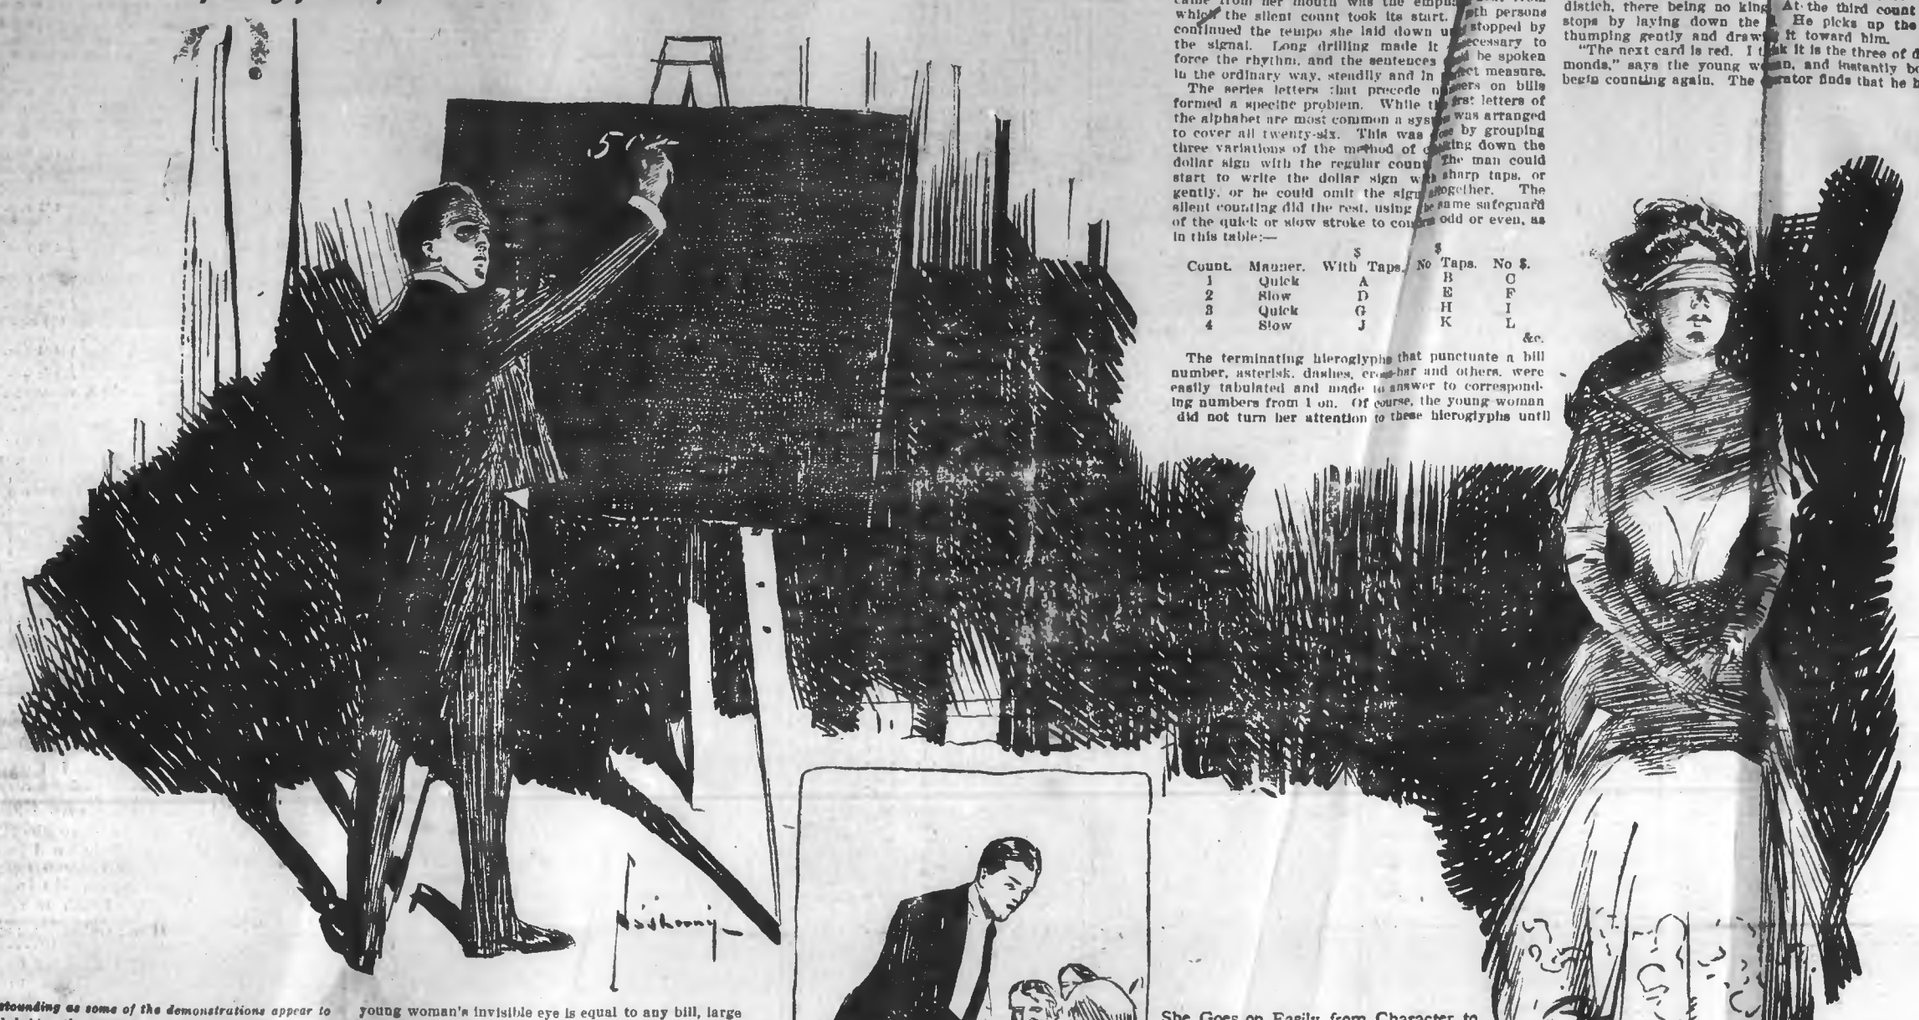
REVEALING the MYSTERIES OF SECOND SIGHT

IT Is Shown That the Methods by Which Mind Readers Ply Their Puzzling Calling Are Surprisingly Simple



Astounding as some of the demonstrations appear to the beholder, the methods by which mind readers ply their calling are surprisingly simple.

THE dapper chap in a dress suit that fits impossibly well descends from the stage to the aisle on his carpeted bridge, leaving a sheepish committee blinking at the footlights as guard of honor to the handsome young woman whose bandaged eyes they have just inspected.

"Will some gentleman in the audience kindly favor me with a bank bill or a treasury note? Any denomination. Thank you, sir, that will do very nicely. Now, will you please make a note of the number so as to be able to identify it?

"As you will all notice, the lady is sitting on a pedestal made up of several wooden frames, which absolutely prevent the possibility of electric communication. Your committee has blindfolded her. She is quite unable to see the blackboard. I will now take a piece of chalk—no mystery here, as you see. And we will proceed with the test."

The dapper chap regains the stage and takes up position before the blackboard where his every movement is visible. The self-conscious committee shifts to a new set of attitudes. The young woman, leaning back in her chair, apparently surrenders herself to a trancelike condition, moves her lips and speaks in a strained faraway voice, subtly suggestive of a prescient soul bending to its arduous task.

"I think it is a five dollar bill."

The audience gives close attention, for every one can see that it is a really, truly five dollar bill, and even the scornfully sceptical are interested. The dapper chap writes "$5.00" in heavy characters upon the board.

"First I see a letter E," continues the young woman. The dapper chap obediently transfers the letter with his grating chalk.

"The next appears to be 6," says the young woman. "Now put down the figure 4." She goes on easily from character to character, while the dapper chap follows her announcements on the blackboard and the audience forgets to rustle its programmes until the number of the bill is complete. She even describes the punctuating hieroglyph, and he of the faultless dress suit steps forward from the finished work with a smile, descending to the aisle once more.

"You are the gentleman who favored me, are you not? Thank you. Will you kindly note whether the bill is yours and the number correctly given? Thank you. Do you mind allowing me to show it to your neighbors? Thank you."

Oh, there is not the slightest doubt about it. The young woman has read the number of the bill without a slip, right through the bandages and the clustering group of the committee. And lest the sceptical should suspect collusion or a confederate the dapper chap wanders up the aisle for the next test and [illegible] a fifty dollar bill from a stout gentleman in the middle of a row. It is quite too wonderful. The young woman's invisible eye is equal to any bill, large or small, and she is evidently well acquainted with the state of every pocketbook in the house. Yielding to an urgent request the dapper chap even consents to try her with a watch, whereupon she begins by announcing that it is silver and gives the number as before.

Marvellous Second Sight.

Second sight! Mind reading! Surely every one has witnessed some such demonstration and has gone home afterward, perhaps unbelieving but puzzled, and, it may be, just a trifle uneasy. "Of course it's a trick, but how is it done?" comes the inevitable bromidion. The more credulous remark, "Well, there really may be something in it. Now, when Arthur fell down the cellar stairs and broke his leg"——, launching into a domestic episode in which the occult furnishes a stimulating if unconvincing atmosphere. Others, a few, recognize in the achievements of the young woman psychic phenomena which are perfectly familiar and commonplace.

But the advantage, for the purposes of this article, is still with the bromide. "It's a trick, but how is it done?" The "how" is rather clever, and, as always, simple. Some time before the booking of the attraction, when the dapper chap and the young woman were preparing for the working of wonders, when the prescient soul was in process of development in the earthly surroundings of a hall room, there was a long period of monotonous practice by which all the rest was made possible. The paraphernalia for that training were far less elaborate than stage art is frequently demand. They were nothing more than a small leaden ball and a string by which was suspended, in short, a pendulum. Which takes us immediately out of the realm of psychics into that of physics.

The pendulum was tacked up in the window, hanging from the cross piece, as the best place for observation. The string was shortened until, by experiment, it was found to register about seventy beats to the minute when set to swinging. Then the dapper chap, not yet arrayed in his too flawless clothes and probably far from dapper at all, took a seat beside the young woman and both began to watch this makeshift metronome.

As they watched they counted silently up to ten, emphasized a beat and began again. After half an hour of this they looked away from the pendulum for short intervals, glancing back frequently to see whether they had been able to keep the tempo exactly. If they had they were happy. If they had not they were irritated and began to wonder where the fried sausages were coming from should they fail to perfect the act. But in due course, after some days or weeks, they could hold the beat in unison without referring to the pendulum.

Then began another kind of training. The dapper chap would cry "Now!" sharply. Taking this as the start, both would begin to count silently. When the man reached any number up to ten that suited him he would rap the table sharply as the signal to stop.

"Well, where was I?" he would ask. And she would answer that he had meant to convey four or seven or nine or whatever point she had reached herself in her counting. If she was right, [illegible]fibly right, they were satisfied. If not, probably some epithet quite unreconcilable with the occult passed between them. However, in the end they could do the trick perfectly. Then for a time the young woman took the lead, and the man had to follow her until there was no longer any chance for error in the silent harmony of count.

But for public exhibition it is not enough to eliminate a chance for error. The chance must be buttressed and insured and double locked against. The blackboard and chalk of the real act were brought into play—a very rough blackboard and very hard chalk—and they began to practise in earnest.

Will You Kindly Note Whether the Bill Is Yours and the Number Correctly Given?

In the first place, they devised a set of easy cues to determine the value of any bill which might be presented—$1, "Thanks;" $2, "All right;" $5, "Thank you;" $10, "Much obliged;" $20, "That's it;" $50, "That will do;" $100, "Quite satisfactory." If you ever want to break up such a demonstration at the outset you might offer a ten thousand dollar bill. The chances are that the mind readers would have no signal ready for it. In determining the metal of proffered watches an equally simple series of phrases was prepared.

Drill Is Perfect.

From then on they did their drilling in the silent count, with the last syllable of a sentence uttered by the young woman as the starting signal and the sound of the chalk against the board as the stop signal. "I can see that a four is the next on the bill," she would say. The word "bill" corresponded with the emphasized beat or the "now" of the earlier practice. They would count from this start until the man touched the blackboard.

Additional safeguards could be introduced here. If the man made a mark sharply, with a quick scratch, it served as warning that the number was an odd one; if he moved the chalk slowly the number was even. The advantage of this was great, for, while the young woman might be counting slightly faster than standard tempo and might almost have reached seven, a slow stroke of the chalk at this point would correct her and settle her at six.

Still another refinement of the system was now approached. A dead pause of nine or ten seconds on a stage is dangerous. The sceptical and the knowing are quite likely to observe such a lapse, and to observe, moreover, that while some of the intervals are remarkably long others are very short. To overcome this difficulty the numbers 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, accompanied by a sharp tap of the chalk, stood, respectively, for 6, 7, 8, 9 and 0. Thus, for a number it was not necessary to count beyond five, and no long pauses ensued. If the man wished to communicate 8 he stopped the count at the third beat by simply placing the chalk against the board. But if he wished to communicate 8 he stopped at the third beat [illegible]h a tap.

There remained, after all this, the neces[illegible] for regulating the standard of the tempo, the [illegible] important point of all. Excitement incident [illegible]ublic appearance, any slight nervousness, indi[illegible]ition, might throw either completely out of hard[illegible] with the proper beat. So they composed a seri[illegible]f sentences that would scan, after a fashion:—"I [illegible]hink—it is—a five—dollar bill." "Now—put [illegible]n—the fig—ure six." It was not difficult to find[illegible]e such rough syllable rhythm to fit each utter[illegible] of the woman.

When she gave out one of these s[illegible]ces she thereby set the tempo for the count, wh[illegible]picked up from her last syllable. "The next—app[illegible]—to be—an eight" (1, 2, 3, &c). Always the la[illegible]ound that came from her mouth was the empha[illegible] beat from which the silent count took its start. [illegible]th persons continued the tempo she laid down u[illegible] stopped by the signal. Long drilling made it [illegible]ecessary to force the rhythm, and the sentences [illegible]d be spoken in the ordinary way, steadily and in [illegible]ect measure.

The series letters that precede numbers on bills formed a specific problem. While th[illegible]rst letters of the alphabet are most common a sys[illegible] was arranged to cover all twenty-six. This was [illegible]e by grouping three variations of the method of c[illegible]ing down the dollar sign with the regular count. The man could start to write the dollar sign with sharp taps, or gently, or he could omit the sign altogether. The silent counting did the rest, using the same safeguard of the quick or slow stroke to co[illegible] odd or even, as in this table:—

Count.	Manner.	$ With Taps.	$ No Taps.	No $.
1	Quick	A	B	C
2	Slow	D	E	F
3	Quick	G	H	I
4	Slow	J	K	L

The terminating hieroglyphs that punctuate a bill number, asterisk, dashes, cross-bar and others, were easily tabulated and made to answer to corresponding numbers from 1 on. Of course, the young woman did not turn her attention to these hieroglyphs until she received the signal from the man that the number itself stood complete.

Finally came a day when they were to put their long days of training to the test, possibly before some manager or in the kindlier presence of friends. The young woman was blindfolded, placed with her back to the blackboard, where she sat listening acutely. The dapper chap asked some one present for a bill. His acknowledgment of "Thanks" indicated to her at once that its denomination was $1. What she had to discover piecemeal was the fact that it was marked "K19684920."

The One Dollar Bill.

When he was ready before the blackboard she said, "I think it is a one dollar bill." Then both began to count. At six the man touched the board with the chalk and scrawled "1.00" slowly, without any dollar mark. Sixth line, third column of the table indicated "R."

"The first is the letter R," she said, and the man stopped the count on the first beat with a quick, easy dash of the chalk as he began to write the "R."

"The next I see is the figure 1," she went on. He stopped her this time on the fourth beat with a sharp tap and a quick scratch on the board. This gave her "nine" and showed her that she was right in taking an odd number. So it went on, figure by figure, until the last. Having received the signal for "O" from five beats, tap and slow mark, she gave it. The man delayed marking it on the board until the beat had passed beyond any recognized signal.

"Now, there is some kind of mark after the number," she said. They counted to the proper place, where he stopped by placing his chalk in position as if waiting instructions. "A mark like three dashes coming to a point," she added. And the test was over.

Silent counting, in more or less elaborate form, is the basis for almost all the second sight and mind reading acts for public performance. Different systems and variations have been introduced and successfully practised, but all silent methods work upon the same principle. There are several good applications, one being the card test.

"Eight kings threatened to save
Nine fair ladies for one sick knave."

Did they really? They certainly did, probably back in the time of Merlin or whoever invented the first card trick. The time honored distich affords the best rotation and the one most easily remembered, translating into

"Eight, king, three, ten, two, seven,
Nine, five, queen, four, ace, six, knave."

The suit is indicated by the manner in which the card is picked up from the table or inclined plane on which the test is exhibited. Thus, clubs is indicated to the blindfolded "medium" when the operator draws it toward him across the table; spades is shown by a sharp twist in picking up the card so as to make an audible scratching sound; hearts by setting the fingers down upon the card with a thump and diamonds by a thump followed by drawing across the board as for clubs.

The dapper chap calls for some one from the audience or for the stage committee to take charge of a pack of cards and select any eight cards, or more if desired. These the volunteer places on the table or inclined board exposed to the audience. We will suppose that the cards selected are 3D, 9H, JC, 8C, 4H, QH, 2S, AS. The operator busies himself arranging the cards, meanwhile noticing that he has an 8—the first beat in the distich.

"Are you almost ready now?" asks the young woman, impatiently—not so impatiently, however, but that she sets the tempo. "Are—you al—most read—y now?" They both begin the silent count with the last sound she utters. The operator in this case stops her on the first beat by picking up the card, drawing it sharply toward himself across the board, then holding it up for the inspection of the audience.

Of Course It's Easy.

"I see a black card," says the young woman, with shameless mendacity—"a club. It seems to be the eight of clubs." Here is another rhythmical sentence, and both begin counting immediately. The operator has noticed that the next card in the rotation is the 3, which fits in the third beat of the distich, there being no king. At the third count he stops by laying down the 8. He picks up the 3, thumping gently and drawing it toward him.

"The next card is red. I think it is the three of diamonds," says the young woman, and instantly both begin counting again. The operator finds that he has no ten, the next card in the rotation being the two. They count silently, "Eight kings threatened to"——. At this point the operator stops by setting down the three, then takes up the two with a sharp twist.

"It is a black card," says the young woman. "It seems to be the deuce of spades." Both begin to count, "Eight kings threatened to save nine"——. Here the operator stops, picking up the card with a sharp dab of his fingers against the board.

"Red this time," says the young woman. "I plainly see the nine of hearts." And so it goes, through the list. The price of success, according to all "mind readers," is constant drill in the count. Once this is perfected occult wonders are easy.

The adding of four columns of figures of four figures each is another clever example of what may be done with the silent counting. A volunteer from the audience writes the figures on the board, and the blindfolded "medium" adds them, down and across. The process is the same as in the bill test, the signals being given with taps of the chalk at 1 the way in which the figures are written. The first signal is given by the operator in drawing the line under the figures. A secondary code is necessary to indicate the amount carried each time.

The usual practice in winding up this test is "mind reading" of figures pointed out by the operator. He points to various numbers, occasionally to a blank spot, in succession, and the young woman calls them off. This is done by a prearranged rotation, such as "three, nine, four, two, nothing there, eight, one, six, naught, two, nothing there, five, seven," or any other system. The operator, of course, follows this memorized table in pointing. He has several tricks at hand to fill up a gap in the rotation. Suppose, for instance, that there happens to be no six on the board. After she has identified the "one" correctly he turns to the audience with a wink, as if planning some sly trick, then writes a "six" in a vacant place. She immediately names it and the audience smiles delightedly.

The calling of figures that are pointed out by some person from the audience, usually worked in connection with the above, does not depend upon the counting process, but upon the quick eye and judgment of the operator. Just as the conjurer is able to force a card, the operator must know how to judge where the wavering pointer is going to land by the way the volunteer advances it. A code of signals does the rest, such as "any one," "any at all," "any one at all," "no difference," "take your choice," and others.

Another of the favorite tests which rely upon a memorized rotation is the knight's tour in chess. The blackboard is marked into sixty-four squares, numbered from left to right. The problem is to start the knight anywhere and take it over the board with its proper move, no square to be omitted and no square to be crossed more than twice. The operator permits the audience to name the square from which the start is to be made, then follows the directions of the "medium" with the chalk. It makes not the slightest difference where the start is made, for the system is rotary and when the sequence is once learned can be picked up at any point. There are a number of tables, this being the best:—

1, 18, 35, 50, 60, 54, 64, 47, 32, 15, 5, 20, 3, 9, 26, 41, 58, 52, 62, 56, 39, 24, 7, 22, 37, 43, 28, 13, 30, 45, 35, 29, 46, 36, 21, 38, 44, 27, 42, 57, 51, 61, 55, 40, 23, 8, 14, 4, 10, 25, 19, 34, 49, 59, 53, 63, 48, 31, 16, 6, 12, 2, 17, 11, 1.

If the start should be made at 6, for instance, the system would simply turn the corner and run on from 11 to 1, 18, 33, &c.

A Lazy Liver

The liver is to struggle — like stomach bad.

A bitter taste in the mouth—coated tongue—dizziness on rising suddenly—bowels alternately loose and constipated—these mean that the liver is out of order.

Instead of flowing into the bowels, to regulate them and aid digestion, the bile has been going all through the system, upsetting digestion, leaving the bowels constipated, and making the sufferer perfectly miserable. This is biliousness.

The quick, safe and certain cure is Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills. They clear out the clogged-up system, stir up the lazy liver, cleanse the stomach and bowels and purify the blood. The bile returns to its normal course, the food is again digested properly and all the disagreeable symptoms vanish.

Doctors prescribe Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills and they are known throughout the world as a proven cure for all digestive troubles. They are equally effective in strengthening weak kidneys and curing rheumatism.

OPERATIONS AT BLAIRTON MINES

Examiner Special.

Havelock, April 5.—It is very likely that operations will commence at the Blairton iron mines on a large scale sometime during the summer. The Hamilton iron and steel company have secured an option on the property and although they have the results of the last inspection of the mine, which shows that it can be operated at a profit, yet they will have another thorough examination before purchasing. They have awarded the contract to the Diamond Drill Company ,of Sudbury, who at present have one drill in operation there and will add another within the next few days in order that an examination may be completed as soon as possible. The residents of that hamlet and those who own property in the neighbourhod of the mine are much pleased with the prospects that Blairton may once again regain its old prosperity and liveliness. The vilalge of Blairton was at one time a very prosperous and business like place when the iron mines were in operation before, but now it has been reduced to only a few inhabitants. But now those that reside in that small, yet picturesque village, wear a smile on their face and the hearts of property owners in the place are filled with gladness, for in all probability the iron mines will be opened during the summer.

The Blairton iron mines are situated about six miles east of Havelock, about three-quarters of a mile north of the Marmora road. It is about three miles to the north of Blairton station on the C.P.R. line. The mines are in the neighbourhood of the village and cover about twenty-five acres.

When the mines were in operation before, Blairton was one of the most prosperous and gayest towns to be seen. At that time there was a large population and although men and their families were continually flocking in, still there was a demand for labourers.

The village soon grew in size, many of the buildings being of extensive dimensions and latest designs, stores, blacksmith shops, harness shops and other building sprang up as if by magic and a month made a great difference in the little hamlet. Saw mills were scarce in the district, and although there was plenty of timber, lumber could not be cut fast enough to supply the demand.

A railway connected Blairton with the docks at Trent Bridge. This railway was kept in continual action for when there was no ore to ship, there were supplies of machinery and provisions to be brought in. On the whole, it was, as hard to get goods into Blairton as it was to get goods to Gow Ganda when it first opened up.

Nor was it all work, for nearly every week during the summer there were excursions of some kind to Trent Bridge and from there to other points by steamboat. Every evening after working hours, the lake near by was crowded with boats, filled with the happiest people that ever drew breath in America.

Blairton was beautifully and skilfully laid out on high ground of hard, sandy soil, the streets descending in all directions. The supply of water is abundant and the quality of the best. The scenery of Crow Lake, with its islands, coves and points, is very picturesque. Mrs. Sweeney, wife of the late manager of the Deloro mines, during her stay in Marmora, made weekly trips to Blairton for the purpose of painting pictures of the charming spots around the lake, which she supplied to the leading papers of London.

Although the school and church were of a fair size, they were not large enough to accommodate the large number that attended.

The Pittsburg Company, under which the mine was last operated, paid out in taxes for Blairton property alone, more than $500. Blairton had no staff officers. The rate of wages were: Superintendent $100 per month, foreman $65, and bookkeeper $60 per month, miners $1.75 and labourers $1.10 per day. The manual force was too small and the company brought out forty men from Switzerland and thirty-five others from the Cornwall mines in England.

The average of all analysis places the yield at 60 to 65 per cent. of metallic iron. Mining for iron ore was started in 1820 by a Mr. Hays for the supply of a blast furnace at Marmora, Mr. Hays was granted thousands of acres of land at 10 cents per acre at this time. This land lay in the townships of Belmont and Methuen. The ore taken out from the opening of the mine up to the present amounts to three million cubic feet.

Fatalities in the mine during its operation were not numerous. Two Englishmen, Arthur Jones and Wm. Fulcher, were instantly killed in the 'derick pit' by iron falling on them from the hoisting basket over 100 feet above their heads. The third and last victim was Samuel Bray, who was drowned in one of five cars which was put over the dumping ground at the dock at Trent Bridge into the river. Directly south of the outer pier at Trent Bridge, there lie five empty cars which can be seen at low water.

But there is a fall to all greatness, and so it was with Blairton when operations were discontinued at the mine. There was a general exodus of people and although quite a number remained, they kept gradually dwindling away until now the population is very small. There is now no weekly excursion, no crowded church or school, no great demand for labourers, and it was practically down and out.

But now there is a great probability that there will be a grand revival. When the mine is opened up there will likely be a spur line built from the mines to the C.P.R. line at Blairton station.

Meanwhile the citizens of Blairton and Havelock wait patiently for operations to commence.

Suffered Terrible Pains From His Kidneys.

Perhaps no other organs work harder than the kidneys to preserve the general health of the body, and most people are troubled with some kind of kidney complaint, but do not suspect it.

There is no way of getting the kidney poisons out of the system except through the kidneys, and no medicine so effective in taking them out as Doan's Kidney Pills.

They help the kidneys to flush off the acrid and poisonous impurities which have collected, thus clearing out the kidneys, bladder and urinary passages.

Doan's Kidney Pills are entirely vegetable, and may be safely taken by old and young.

Mr. Dougald A. McIsaac, Broad Cove Banks, N.S., writes:—"I was troubled with my kidneys for nine months, and suffered with such terrible pains across the small of my back all the time that I could hardly get around. After taking two boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills I began to feel better, and by the time I had taken three I was completely cured."

THE PRIVATE PURSE

From Farm and Dairy.

Mrs. David Miller, Pres. Warsaw Women's Institute.

Should there, or should there not exist separate purses in the family for husband, wife and children? To teach the children the value of money and unselfishness? Yes. For the purposes of convenience and economy the wife certainly should have one. That husband and wife may spend what and where they like without in any way considering the other? No. That the wife may be paid? No, she cannot be paid. No, a feeling of either dependence or independence should never exist. That the child may purchase whatever it chooses? No. Many other conditions argue for and against the "separate purse." The sum and substance of all is that to a certain extent there should be, and beyond that point there should not be.

Begin with the child. A separate purse or bank account for each child, just as soon as he or she begins to know what money will do—how it can be used, or abused, with careful guidance, will generally teach a child not to waste money, and also to be generous. If the child is given a certain amount, increasing as he grows older, and told that that sum is to go so far—provide certain things—he will learn to keep within bounds, unless he has found out that if he does spend his money foolishly his parents will unquestionably procure the needed things anyway. Every child should be taught to save his collection money, and to make little gifts out of his allowance, and share treats bought with it. This teaches the child generosity. Many parents rigidly keep the child to procuring certain necessaries, but any that he buys with his own money are his own to be used for himself.

I have seen a child buy a few candies and offer other members of the family a share, be thanked, but told "You keep them for yourself; you bought them with your own money." Perhaps in later years the parent may wonder why the child is so selfish. Then, too, it is wise to teach the child that he should save part of whatever he has for church and Sunday school collections; for missions and charities; teaching him that he is responsible for a certain share in the world's work. Money spent in pushing a "hobby" should practically all come out of the child's allowance. If he persists in wearing old shoes and spending more on his "hobby" he will value his hobby more, and make it of greater use to himself, especially if the parent insist that the old shoes be kept neat. When they are absolutely necessary, insist on new ones. It sometimes happens that a boy or girl will sacrifice absolute necessaries to a hobby, either hoping the parent will make good, which teaches debt, or willing to go untidy, which teaches thriftlessness. The band and wife should not mean that child's purse, while his own, should be carefully and kindly guarded. An unlimited supply of money,or even a limited supply unguarded or with no restrictions, is ruinous.

In the papers we often see much about the private purse. One hears of it on all sides. It does seem that the cry, the wife should have an allowance (as though she were some child, etc.), that she should be paid, that she should be independent, arise out of conditions that should not,nay, cannot exist in the home, where the true idea of marriage exists. Husevery five cents a husband or wife spends he or she should take specific pains to tell to the other. Indeed for matters of economy and convenience there should be separate purses. The wife has left her own home or given up a good position. The man who takes her is in all honor bound to provide for her as well as she has been, if it is in his power, and to improve if possible. Even if he has taken her from nothing, he is bound to do his best, if he has any manhood in him, and the wife has a right to expect it and to take it as her right at the very outset: Through all time conditions should be considered. Each must trust the other and make up their minds to live within circumstances on existing income. Each should make an estimate of what is needed and right for expenses. Proper clothes are as much a necessity as is our bread and butter, and either man or woman, if possible to avoid it, often caused by the wife herself not knowing what she does want, or by should not be improperly clothed. A certain amount of pleasure making should be provided for, for "a little nonsense now and then is relished by the best of men," but the nonsense should only be a relish, not a steady food.

A wife should never have to "beg" and haggle for every cent she wants, or for anything. Some men consider that every time a wife asks for money it is their duty to haggle the amount down, or try to, until the wife is in a state of nervous collapse every time she wants anything. This condition is her imagining her husband does not like her needing things. She cannot keep house or dress on air, and she should maintain her dignity and not put her needs in a begging form, but take them as a matter of course. In some few cases the husband will haggle anyway. Well, such men have no business to have wives, and their home certainly cannot be an ideal one.

It is sometimes said that the wife does more than any hired help could or would do, in addition to her duties as wife, therefore she should be paid. My husband could not insult me more than to offer to pay me. He could not do it. No husband could pay his wife. Her work, her responsibility, her care cannot be paid for in money value. It can only be paid for by a devoted life. Neither is the wife in the home a child to be given an allowance to do what she can with it. True many women do not know the value of money. If there be a certain fixed salary coming in, then it would seem that a certain proportion be set aside for the proverbial "rainy day," a certain amount for household expenses, clothing, improvement, pleasure, etc. If no certain amount comes in, then it is obvious no certain amount can be set aside, but for convenience sake certain proportions could be and in the best all round managed homes are set aside for certain uses.

Now for the economy, almost any merchant will tell you that if the wife runs accounts which the husband pays for, if she pays them with checks, she will buy far more than she will if she has the actual money in her hand. Therefore, if the man wants to keep down his expenses he is generally wiser to place the money in her hands. Again, as a rule a woman is a better buyer than a man; she is more apt to watch sales. She is more apt to know at what times in the year she can buy most advantageously, etc, if she has a certain amount and knows just how much she can have, or that she can have a certain amount at her disposal. She can do far better and make the money go farther than if she did not know what she had to do it with. Again, it is to the husband's advantage to see that she has the money, if at all possible. Then if the woman knows how much she is to have, she can make her plans accordingly and make her money go farther.

There are some women who do not want to be bothered buying. Go to a store they will not, if they can avoid it. Perhaps if money were unlimited they would, but they do not like to bother considering, and in a general way they tell their husbands the things they want and the poor man does the best he can. Such a system may exist with happiness, but there is likely to be want also.

THE CHEESE SITUATION

From Farm and Dairy.

By Our Montreal Correspondent

The season of 1909-10 has wound up very satisfactorily in so far as the exporters and dealers in Montreal are concerned. The advance in prices during the winter months, which was generally expected, materialized to the satisfaction of all concerned. The high prices which prevailed for cheese and butter during the past season made speculative trading in either article decidedly dangerous, and those who indulged to any extent certainly deserve any profits they may have made.

The market for cheese is winding up with the stores practically cleaned up. It is a question if there are 10,000 boxes of cheese left in the Dominion of Canada. The stocks at the beginning of March were estimated to be about 40,000 boxes, divided up in small blocks all over the country with probably half the total in the warehouses in Montreal. During the month about 30,000 boxes have been shipped from Portland and St. John, leaving about 10,000 boxes still in store. About half of these are for sale, but as they consist of colored cheese, for which there is no demand at present, they are not moving very freely, and holders are inclined to cut prices somewhat in order to see them cleaned up. Some of these could be picked up at about 12 cents to 12¼ cents, f.o.b., but the general asking price is 12¼ cents to 12½ cents a lb.

Advices from the other side indicate a strong market there with every prospect of high prices prevailing before the advent of the new season's goods. Some of the dealers have received enquiries already for new cheese, and a number of factories have been approached with a view to contracting their April output, without, however, any business having been done. The demand is solely for white cheese, and the factories all over the country are strongly advised to make white cheese for the first two or three weeks, and then to make the class of cheese they are in the habit of making in past seasons. High prices will certainly rule during the first few weeks of the new season, after that the course of prices will depend upon the output of our factories and the extent of the demand from Great Britain.

OUTLOOK FOR DAIRYIAG BRIGHT

From Farm and Dairy.

Rapid as has been the progress made by the dairy industry in recent years, the season of 1910 now opening bids fair to eclipse them all. A ready market awaits all dairy products and more than average prices will be realized on the first products of the season at least.

Feed supplies seem plentiful. From all quarters come reports of plenty and with the prospect of an early spring, the situation is most encouraging. Prices realized at recent auction sales go to show that everywhere confidence of no small degree is placed in the dairy business.

While prospects are bright for the early part of the season, what of the later months? This no one can foretell. By arranging for summer feeds, however, all can provide for any exigencies that may arise through drought, short pastures and consequent decreased milk flow. This matter is dealt with by a number of well known experts elsewhere in this issue.

Our dairy industry and all that pertains to it is capable of great and wonderful advancement. There is a marked difference between the average and the possible. Let us hope that this margin will be narrowed in no inconsiderable degree this season. To realise this object, we must put into practice the information that is available.

Dramatic Pursuit of Robbers.

Chicago, April 8.—Five masked bandits, escaping with $2,000 stolen from the Bank of Coal City at Coal City, Ills., exchanged shots with a posse yesterday, three of the robbers being wounded and captured. Coal City is 63 miles southwest of Chicago.

The marauders entered the town on a passing freight train and began operations by tying Barney Ghetto, the night watchman, and Washington Frye, the night engineer of the electric plant. Then they blew up the bank building and shattered the safe with a great charge of nitro-glycerine, and leaped on a freight train with their plunder, which was partly in stamps.

As the train pulled out Ghetto succeeded in cutting his bonds and telephone Eugene Miller, the night watchman at Mazeon, seven miles south of Coal City, who, with Dr. E. D. Watts, lay in wait for the robbers. When the train reached Mazeon, and stopped to switch cars, the bandits leaped from the car and hid in a clump of shrubbery near the track.

Miller and the physician opened fire, which was promptly returned, about 25 shots being exchanged. When the train started the bandits leaped aboard and again escaped.

Immediately the sheriff of Morris was notified. Several automobiles were pressed into service, and the pursuit began, the machines following a road along the Santa Fe right of way. When the train came to a stop at Verona, near Morris, the cars were searched by the sheriff and his men.

Three of the fugitives, wounded, were found in an empty baggage car.

Nervous Headache

AND MUSCULAR RHEUMATISM DISAPPEARED WHEN THE NERVES WERE RESTORED BY

DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD

Feeble, wasted, starved nerves often make their condition known by nervous headaches. This was one of the first and most marked symptoms.

If you are at all subject to rheumatism you have noticed how much worse it gets when the system gets run down.

Both nervous headache and muscular rheumatism disappear when Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is used to rebuild and revitalize the wasted and weakened body.

Mr. James Riley, moulder for the Waterous Engine Co., 46 Jarvis St., Brantford, Ont., writes: "I suffered for years with muscular rheumatism and as I also had frequent and severe attacks of nervous headache I concluded that the trouble came from the nerves and began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. As I continued this treatment the rheumatism was gradually driven out of the system, my nerves got stronger and steadier and the headaches disappeared. I consider Dr. Chase's Nerve Food a splendid nerve regulator and health builder."

You cannot possibly make a mistake in using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food when the nervous system gets run down, for, by forming new, rich, blood this great food cure builds up the nerve cells as nothing else can.

When you have made up your mind to test this treatment, go at it in earnest and keep at it regularly until you feel again the joy of health and vigour.

HIS DAUGHTER KNEW THE RIGHT REMEDY

To Cure Kidney Trouble

The United States is all right, you know, but Uncle Sam's doctors have not found a cure for serious Kidney Trouble. When sick folks down there want to get well, they send to Canada for Gin Pills.

At least, that is the way Mr. H. S. Ball, of Oxford, Ohio, was cured of a bad case of Kidney Disease.

Mr. Ball took the usual remedies prescribed by the doctors, and wore plasters, and was rubbed with liniments—but steadily grew worse. In a letter to his daughter, who lived in Canada, Mr. Ball wrote of his serious condition. His daughter immediately sent him two boxes of Gin Pills, which did him so much good that he knew he had found the right remedy at last.

July 25th, 1909.

"Find enclosed one dollar for which please send me two boxes of Gin Pills. My daughter sent me two boxes and I had a bad case and am getting well fast. I find lots of men down here in the same fix that I was in, and I shall surely recommend Gin Pills to everybody."

H. S. BALL.

Gin Pills are a product that every Canadian may take pride in, and one that thousands endorse. They are made by the largest wholesale drug house in Canada, who fully guarantee every box. In fact, Gin Pills are sold with a positive guarantee. If, after taking Gin Pills according to directions, you can honestly say that they have not done you any good, simply return the empty boxes to your dealer and your money will be promptly refunded.

Saves Innocent Man.

Chatham, April 8.—The $300 worth of rings which were supposed to have been stolen at the Grand Trunk depot Wednesday were yesterday morning found by Patrolman Dodson on the fingers of Permilla Smale, a girl 14 years of age.

The girl was at the station when the train came in carrying the rings from London. The package evidently fell off the baggageman's truck and the girl found it. Her father, who is near-sighted, thought they were brass and worthless.

This bears out the story told by Baggageman Haslett, who was arrested, charged with theft, and who denied ever having seen the package.

Canadian Merchants Will Suffer.

Washington, D.C., April 8.—Stringent regulations have been made by the Treasury Department to break up the practice of Americans crossing the Mexican and Canadian boundaries bringing free of duty into the United States dutiable goods in the guise of wearing apparel.

A form of declaration and entry has been adopted for use at frontier ports limiting such importations to $10.

Montreal's Population.

Montreal, April 8.—The City of Montreal, according to the municipal census, has almost 600,000 people. The city proper has a population of 530,000, while there are 82,000 more in the adjoining towns, as follows: Maisonneuve, 22,500; Westmount, 14,000; Verdun, 10,500; Ville Emard, 3,400; Notre Dame de Grace, 4,000; Ville St. Paul, 3,500; Outremont, 3,000; making 62,000 in all.

New York Broker a Baronet.

New York, April 8.—The World yesterday said: "Arthur Boswell Elliott, for years James R. New York, April 8.—Standing a few feet from the window of his bedroom on the fifth floor of a fashionable Lennox avenue apartment house, Harry Cohan, a former diamond broker, leaped forward headlong, crashed through the glass, and plunged to the concrete pavement below. Cohan learned last week that he was incurably ill.

Dynamite Explosion Causes Havoc.

Tokio, April 8.—A lighter loaded with dynamite in the harbor of Kobe, caught fire yesterday, causing an explosion that killed three persons, wrecked many houses on the waterfront, and caused a monetary damage of $250,000.

Father Lost; Wanted to Marry.

Niagara Falls, Ont., April 8.—Miss Leila Hazman, Niagara Falls, N.Y., and Elmer Fonner, North Tonawanda, N.Y., put in a busy day trying to get married, finally succeeding last night, when Rural Dean Bevan tied the knot.

They could not secure a license on the U. S. side, as Fonner was under age and the consent of his parents was necessary.

His father disappeared thirteen years ago and has not been heard of since, but Fonner could not swear his parent was dead, and U. S. authorities refused to issue the license on only the mother's permission.

Honor For McFadyen.

Halifax, N.S., April 8.—The Senate of the Halifax Presbyterian College have decided to confer the degree of D.D. on Prof. McFadyen of Knox College, Toronto.

It is understood that Prof. McFadyen will succeed Prof. George Adam Smith of Glasgow University, who is to become president of Aberdeen University.

These were mostly steers from 900 to 1100 pounds and Mr. Murby states they were mostly of good quality, paying as high as 6¼c for a few odd lots, but those it must be understood, were best quality and cattle that in a pinch would be exported. Girl Burned to Death.

Unionville, April 8.—Through her clothes becoming ignited while working around the kitchen stove, Eva, eldest daughter of John F. Davison, postmaster and general merchant of this village, was so frightfully burned about 10.30 yesterday morning that her death supervened about five hours later.

Miss Davison was engaged in melting some beeswax and turpentine, and when attempting to remove the pan it upset, scattering some of the fluid over the stove, the contents catching fire, which in turn instantly communicated to the young woman's clothing.

U. S. Railways Reduce Rates.

Washington, D.C., April 8.—In what is believed to be an effort to divert some of the export grain traffic, which usually moves through Canada, to some of the Atlantic seaports in the United States, the trunk lines operating from Buffalo to the seaboard have filed reductions in their grain tariffs with the Interstate Commerce Commission. The reductions will apply only to grain for export.

WALTER ROSS CONVICTED OF PARKINSON MURDER AT RAMORE DEC. 9

Accused of Shooting His Partner in a Lonely Hut for Small Sum of Money.

THE NORTH BAY TRIAL

Special to The Examiner.

North Bay, April 7.—The Ross murder case was concluded to-day, the features being the medical evidence that the bullet entered Parkinson's head behind the right ear, and, in Dr. Jukes Johnson's evidence, that a soft-nosed bullet could not be deflected, as suggested by the defence. Parkinson's trousers were produced with the pocket inside out, as found, after the tragedy, on his body. When the Crown's case was finished, Mr. McGarry announced that there were no witnesses for the defence, and he would not put the prisoner in the box, as the onus was on the Crown to prove that a murder had been committed by the prisoner Ross. This must be proved beyond the shadow of a doubt. He contended that there was no evidence of malice, and that it was not reasonable to suppose that Ross would kill his chum for a few dollars when he knew that the crime must be fastened upon him. Ross' story was reasonable, and Parkinson must have swung round when the shot was fired, and the point where the bullet entered the wall could have been the result of a deflection, as admitted to be possible by Dr. Lowery. Dr. Johnson's opinions should not be sufficient to send Ross to the gallows. Crown Prosecutor Blackstock made a strong indictment of the prisoner, the Crown's theory being that Parkinson was shot from behind while sitting upon a chair resting his head upon his hand. Ross' story was ridiculed as impossible in view of his movements and conflicting statements. Parkinson returned from Monteith on December 7th, and was last known to be alive on the morning of the 8th. Ross spent the afternoon and night of the 8th at Richard's house, where he showed over thirty dollars, when, according to his own statement to Constable Rowell, he should have had no money. Parkinson was known to have had over fifty dollars on that day, but no money was found on his body. On December 9th the evidence showed that Ross could not have been in the shack in the morning more than a few minutes, if at all, and yet he said that the tragedy took place on that morning. His movements were traced all that day till 5 o'clock, when he went to the shack to shave. The Crown theory was that the shooting took place on December 8th; that Ross said nothing till he met the constable at Matheson on the night of the 9th, when he advanced the story of self-defence, knowing that the tragedy would be found out, and to save himself. Mr. Blackstock charged the jury not to humbug with the evidence. There could be no manslaughter verdict; it must be murder or nothing.

The Judge's charge to the jury was distinctly against the prisoner. The jury retired at 3.30 and returned at 4.30 with a verdict of guilty of murder.

Judge Mulock, in discharging the jury, remarked: "You have performed a painful duty like good and true men." Sentence was deferred until Friday.

FIFTEEN DOLLARS FOR PRIZES

Fifteen dollars, in two prizes, has been donated by the Canadian Club to the pupils of the Collegiate Institute for the two best papers written on Canadian History. This was decided on at a meeting of the Executive of the Club, and when announced last evening at the dinner, it was heartily endorsed by the members. This is a splendid movement, and will no doubt be greatly appreciated by the pupils, who will be stimulated to take a deeper interest in the study of Canadian History.

A LOCAL MUSICIAN'S SUCCESS

Peterborough is certainly being well represented in the Earl Grey competition. The Operatic Company was heard in the "Geisha on Tuesday night, the Conservatory Madrigal Club made its appearance last night, and to-night Miss Julia Choate of the Conservatory, will play in the solo competition. Seventy-four entered in this class, and Miss Choate has had the honour of being among the twenty-four selected to compete. Her many friends and citizens generally will hope that she may be successful.

INSPECTOR WAS HERE

Provincial Children's Aid Society Officer Was Investigating Cases of Two Girls Who Ran Away From Home—Sent to Industrial School.

TOOK BOY TO HOSPITAL

Inspector Gunning, of the Children's Aid Societies of the Province, was in the city yesterday. He was investigating the cases of the two young girls of Lindsay, who ran away from that town a few weeks ago, and came to Peterborough. The girls were only fifteen years of age, but they were apparently incorrigible. Their visit to this city was their second escapade; they having previously run away to Buffalo.

While here Inspector Gunning paid a visit to the Shelter and took back with him to the Sick Children's Hospital, the boy with the webbed hand, where he will be treated. It is understood the two girls will spend a term in the Industrial School.

ANOTHER TRIBUTE

"We greatly enjoyed the performance of "The Geisha" last evening, and wish to congratulate you heartily upon it. Everybody thoroughly enjoyed your performance."

IMPORTANT TO LADIES

It is not often an opportunity occurs at your door to see the latest Parisian and New York styles in Hair Goods, yet such is the case, as Prof. Dorenwend, of Toronto, is visiting this town, and invites your inspection of these goods at his private apartments reserved at the Hotel.

These Hair Goods styles, when properly adjusted protect and ornament the head, soften and beautify the expression of the face, and consequently tone up an aged appearance. Be sure and see them at the Oriental Hotel on Friday, April 22nd.

Last evening was the concluding dinner of the Canadian Club, to be held this season. Four have been held and all have proved to be exceedingly interesting and instructive. Supreme Court Signs Order Against Millionaire Moore of Philadelphia.

INTERESTING CASE

Special to The Examiner.

New York, April 6.—Justice O'Gorman, in the Supreme Court, signed an order making the decree of divorce granted Mrs. Gertrude L. Moore against Henry Gibson Moore, a millionaire, by the Philadelphia courts, the judgment of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, and directing that Moore shall file a bond in the sum of $60,000 to secure to Mrs. Moore the payment of alimony at the rate of $333.33 a month.

The divorce was granted in May, 1902, Moore being the son of the late Andrew Moore, a Philadelphia distiller. The defendant is in arrears of alimony from November 19, 1902, to January 19, 1910, the sum aggregating, with interest, $35,234. Justice O'Gorman declares in his decision that $1,000 a month is enough for Moore to live on, and that he must pay out of the balance of $28,000 annual income he enjoys from his share of his father's estate the $333.33 a month, on account of the arrears of alimony and the accruing alimony. In the event of the failure of Moore to file the $60,000 bond Justice O'Gorman orders that a receiver for Moore's estate be appointed.

Mrs. Moore, in 1892, brought suit for a separation, naming Mrs. Annie Deegan. Deegan before this had thrashed Moore alleging that the millionaire had stolen his wife. Moore inherited about $2,000,000 when his father died. He soon became a well-known figure in Philadelphia and finally came to New York. His lavish expenditure of money and his escapades caused his wife to sue for a divorce. It took eleven years before she won it.

Moore was once in contempt of court for refusing to pay alimony. He was examined in supplementary proceedings. Among his alleged characteristics it was set forth that

He never worked in his life.
Never kept a bank account.
Never walked in the city and used a cab if only to cross the street.
Never drank anything but wine.
Often spent $100 a night for wine.
Spent $6 each for his cigars made to order.

Moore's wife and daughter questioned his sanity, but he convinced a jury that he was sane. His income at one time was $26,000 a month.

"IDEALS IN CONTEMPORARY ART" WAS THE SUBJECT

AN ARTISTIC TREAT

The lecture given Wednesday night at the Y. W. C. A. by Mr. E. Wyly Grier, under the auspices of the Women's Art Association, was apparently much appreciated by an attendance of over two hundred, which gathered to hear the eminent artist on the subject of "Ideals in Contemporary Art."

His lecture was breezy and interesting, and he illustrated the new ideals to be found in pictures of the present day, and also new departures in technique and composition. His examples of the French School of impressionists gave one a very realistic idea of this style of painting. Almost equally interesting was the German school of concessionists.

The Norwegian pictures were most pleasing, the American school daring, and introduced very startling ideas in their composition. The lecturer held that while the Dutch as a nation, were most artistic, and, as individuals, had produced wonderful works of art, their painters of the present day failed to be influenced by new ideas. The examples of English landscapes and portraits were delightful.

Mr. Grier's lecture was to make one feel that if we chose to look beyond, then on the walls of the dealers, we would find much that was pleasing and worthy, though not be in vogue with those particular gentlemen.

A vote of thanks was given to Mr. Grier and the ladies of the Association for both a pleasant and profitable evening.

ANNUAL BANQUET OF THE Y. M. C. A. BOYS' DEPARTMENT

Enjoyable Event Held Last Evening at Which One Hundred and Fifty Boys Were Present.

ADDRESS ON COURAGE

The second annual banquet of the Junior Department of the Y.M.C.A. was held last evening in the games room of the boys' department.

Last night's banquet was the largest and most successful one that has ever been held in the Department.

Nearly 150 boys sat down and partook of the dainties furnished by the ladies. After the boys had disposed of the good things, a very interesting programme was given, as follows:

Chairman—Dr. Middleton.
Toast—The King.
Toast—Boys Department, Mr. H. Lees, Mr. W. B. Sharpe.
Reading—Mr. Johns
Address, "Courage"—Rev. Brown.
Presentation of medals, by Mr. J. H. Connal.
Reading—Mr. Johns.
Toast—The Ladies, Mr. Ray Scott, Mr. W. Armstrong.
Remarks — Mr. Shook, Mr. Ray Scott, Mr. Harold Hill.
Closing—"Blest be the Tie That Binds."

The boys' friend, Dr. Middleton, acted as chairman of the evening. After the toast to the King, Mr. H. Lees, proposed the toast of the Boys' Department. He dealt very ably with the history of the department and traced its growth during the last four years (of which time he has been a member), up to the present time, showing how it had grown in influence and strength, after which Mr. B. W. Sharpe, the new boys' secretary, said a few words for his department, and outlined some of the things that will be held, for the boys. Mr. Johns more than delighted the boys with his humorous readings and sketches and no doubt the boys will be glad to hear him again in the near future.

Rev. Mr. Brown was the speaker of the evening and he gave an excellent address on "Courage". He pointed out how all boys admired courage in both men and boys, and finished up by saying that Jesus Christ was the most courageous man that ever lived, and urged the boys to follow Him. After the address Mr. Connal presented the medals that the boys had won for indoor work, and he hoped that there would be twice as many next year to present.

The toast to the Ladies was well handled by Mr. Ray Scott and Mr. W. Armstrong, both speaking very highly of the ladies and thanked them for the splendid banquet that they had prepared.

Mr. Shook, the president, congratulated the boys on the manner in which they had taken care of their rooms and hoped that they would continue to do so.

Mr. Ray Scott and Mr. Harold Hill thanked Mr. Shook for his kind words. The happy evening was brought to a close by all standing and joining hands and singing, "Blest be the Tie That Binds."

FOUGHT WITH HATPINS

Fight Started by Women Boycotting Butcher Shops on Account of High Prices.

New York, April 7. — The kosher butcher shops on the upper East Side which housewives of the vicinity have been boycotting because of the high price of meat, attempted to resume business to-day. Rioting resulted, and the police reserves were called out.

The women boycotters stood on watch outside the butcher shops with bottle of kerosene under their arms. As soon as a customer came out with a package of meat the women seized the meat and saturated it with oil.

One woman objected when a chicken which she had just bought was subjected to the kerosene treatment, and started to fight. In five minutes the street was blocked with a mob. When the police reserves arrived the women turned on them, using hat pins, market baskets, bottles, and anything else that was handy. Finally the street was cleared, and a patrol waggon carried off a load of women to the police station.

There were a number of other fights ,and this afternoon the butchers decided the women were too much for them and closed their shops for the day.

A GRAND SHOWING

Conservatory Madrigal Club Made a Most Favourable Impression Upon the Toronto Critics Last Night—Press Comments.

RECEIVED HIGH PRAISE

The Conservatory Madrigal Club, under the direction of Mr. Rupert Gliddon, visited Toronto yesterday, and took part in the Earl Grey Dramatic and Musical competition at the Royal Alexandra last night. The party, which numbered about fifty-five, left on the 8 o'clock C. P. R. train yesterday morning and returned last night after the performance. They were given a very cordial reception by the large audience, which filled the big theatre and evidently made a most favourable impression upon the Toronto critics, judging by the press references. The party had a most enjoyable visit. Mr. W. McIlroy, C. P. R. agent, looked after their comfort going and coming in splendid fashion.

Some of the comments from the Toronto journals will be of interest:

The Globe says: On the musical side of the competition the Conservatory Madrigal Club of Peterborough, gave an exhibition of sweet and mellow singing in the prescribed test pieces, special praise being awarded to their rendering of Gounod's "By Babylon's Wave."

The Mail and Empire has the following: The musical section served to introduce the Conservative Madrigal Club of Peterborough, which, under the leadership of Mr. Rupert Gliddon, rendered the test number, Buck's "Hymn to Music," and Gounod's "By the Waters of Babylon," in a satisfying manner.

KNOCKED DOWN

Inexperienced Driver Ran Over a Man on Aylmer Street.

Mr. J. Elliott, 112 McDonnel St., had a narrow escape from being seriously injured on Tuesday evening last. Mr. Elliott was crossing the road on Aylmer street, when he was knocked down by a horse, driven by two young boys. Soon a large crowd collected, and the firemen especially showed their hospitality by attending to the old gentleman until he was able to proceed on his way.

This should be a lesson to men who allow their horses to be handled by inexperienced drivers.

WEALTHY JOHN BULL.

John Bull has got on fairly well with free trade and has been able to scrape enough together to keep the wolf from the door. The New York Sun has got hold of a return which reveals the amazing wealth of Great Britain. This return, which has just been issued, shows that during the twelve fiscal years, from 1897 to 1908 death duties to the amount of 1055 million dollars have been collected from 753,284 estates. The aggregate capital upon which these duties were levied, reached the enormous total of $16,338 million dollars, representing an average income of 1,354 1-2 million dollars per year. The average value of these estates was $21,685 each. The valuation for the first year of the period named, with 54,991 estates, was $1,236,710,000 and the average value of the estates was $22,500 each. The valuation of the last year was $1,354,515,000 for 76,524 estates, with an average of $20,000 each.

The largest total of net capital value in the twelve year period was reached in 1906-7, $1,492,300,000 for 66,082 estates, an average capital value of $22,575 each.

NO LIMIT.

The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway seems to have faith in itself. Its shops at Winnipeg, which will probably be finished this year, occupy 300 acres, the area of three ordinary Ontario farms, and there will be seven acres of floor space in the thirteen buildings. These shops will employ, at the beginning 2,500 hands, to be increased to 5,000, as increase of business requires. And it is not likely that there will be any long wait for the business. Settlers are going in upon the new lands opened up by the construction of the railway, and as the story of development goes, the greater the railway extensions are made the greater becomes the necessity of further construction. The great West is not yet a hundredth part filled up, but new areas are opening, and forming new centres of expansion. Even on the western shores of Hudson Bay, from 1,600 to 1,800 miles north west of central Ontario, homestead entries are now being made. There seems to be no limit to Canadian possibilities of expansion—the young giant has no end of room in which to stretch his growing limbs.

LOOKING TO WASHINGTON.

The Mail, of two or three partizan Conservative sheets condemned the tariff agreement with the United States, the former describing it as a "capitulation." The attitude of Canada in that matter was up-standing and self-respecting. Canada surrendered nothing and the country gained immensely by the arrangement arrived at. Canada did not truckle to the United States. It was the aim of the Conservative leaders at Ottawa to place Canada in a suppliant attitude towards the United States. The Liberal Government in its trade arrangements, was and is guided only by consideration of the interests of Canada. The Acadian Recorder of Halifax, thus sets forth the manner in which the Conservative leaders wished the Government to "look to Washington":

During the discussion on the Franco-Canadian treaty, Mr. Borden, Hon. Geo. E. Foster, Mr. Crothers and other leading men of the Tory party asked the Government in tones of fear not to pass upon the provisions of the agreement with France until they ascertained how they were likely to be regarded in Washington. Mr. Foster especially urged this point in favour of delay. What did all this mean, except that Canada must look to Washington for permission before entering into trade treaties with the rest of the world? Such an exhibition of pusillanimity had never been seen in the House of Commons since it first came into existence. The Tory papers re-echoed the craven fears and cowardly confessions of the party leaders at the time. And now they have the assurance to have their fling at the settlement made. Their counsel of cowardice has been succeeded by unblushing misrepresentation. Yet our contemporary claims that the Opposition is led by a great statesman

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Hon. William Roche took his place in the Senate for the first time on Thursday.

One Toronto lawyer has been sent to jail for stealing money. Why this "undue discrimination?"

Montreal is getting to be a big place. Its population has reached the 600,000 mark. Toronto at 400,000 is also getting on.

There is not encouragement to honest living in the fact that the rogues in Toronto jail grow fat on beef at 4¾ cents per pound. This is the price at which beef is supplied by contract to that institution..

The return of so few Conservative members in Quebec at the last general election is explained by the Montreal correspondent of the Toronto World in the statement that Hon. "Bob" Rogers took so much campaign money to Manitoba as to leave the Quebec manager bankrupt in the matter of purity argument.

SPENDING TO HELP CANADA..

(Toronto Telegram.)

Canadian money spent in a Canadian factory employs labour that spends much of its wages for the food raised by Canadian farmers. Canadian money spent in a British factory employs labour that also spends much of the money for food raised by Canadian farmers. These expenditures contribute much to the upbuilding of Canada and are in line with the principles of Canadian protection and British preference.

Canadian money spent in a United States factory or a German, or other foreign factory, employs labour that spends little or none of its wages in food raised by Canadian farmers.

BLIND THROUGH CHOICE.

(Ottawa Free Press.)

Apropos of the Mail and Empire's declaration that the Conservative party is not suffering from internal dissension, the Kingston Standard, one of the sanest Conservative newspapers in the country and an outstanding leader in political thought, asks "What is to be gained by closing our eyes to patent facts?"

But the Mail and Empire has been shutting its eyes to patent facts these many years. It has been blind to everything but the necessity for hidebound party allegiance. Instead of being a political force in the land, which it should and might be, the Mail for the last fifteen years has been hanging on to the coat tails of the politicians.

The strong men on its editorial staff have not been allowed to initiate anything; theirs is but to adhere to the party line. And as the policy of a party must necessarily change according to changing conditions, this implicit adherence has frequently led the Toronto paper into curious situations.

It was the Mail, for instance that declared that the result of the Macdonald-Foster libel case was "a complete vindication of Mr. Foster," while at the present time there is a general movement within the party to depose Foster from the chief lieutenancy because of the exposure to which he was subjected in that very trial.

It was the Mail that the other day referred to the minor concessions to the United States in order to prevent a tariff war as Canada's "Articles on capitulation" which were disgraceful and shameful, while all the other leading Conservatives papers now admit that Canada made a satisfactory bargain.

It is the Mail that asserts that "the rank and file at Ottawa and the Conservatives throughout the country are not bothering" about the proposed reorganization of the Conservative party, when every other Conservative newspaper and everybody who knows anything about the facts knows, as the Kingston Standard says, "that the Conservatives throughout the country are genuinely concerned because they realize that best results cannot be obtained from a party that is divided as it were against itself and that at the moment seems to be in rather a chaotic condition."

The decadence of a great newspaper to the role of mere party hack is not pleasant to those who desire to place Canadian journalism on a high plane.

THE ENGLISHMAN IN THE WEST.

(Ottawa Journal.)

Some little time ago the management of the Winnipeg Telegram announced that they would no longer publish the occasional help wanted advertisements in which the words "No Englishman need apply" were used. The Telegram had, by investigation and experience, found that the Englishman in the West was prospering in his new home fully as well as any other race, and was fully as well liked.

Recently, however, the Winnipeg Free Press published the following advertisement, which is neither typical of the feeling of the Canadian West, nor any section of Canada, and which is given merely as a curiosity of prejudice:

WANTED—At once, a thoroughly competent and experienced male bookkeeper and stenographer, one capable of doing all kinds of office work; good chance for advancement. Will pay big wages to good man. No Englishman or loafers need apply. Write, giving age, experience, references, and salary expected to Drawer C., Francis, Sask

In an issue of the Winnipeg Tribune of the same day appeared an interview with John Nicholls, of Grenfell, a veteran Western editor. He remarked that after some years' experience he had come to the conclusion that the English settler was probably superior to all others. He possesses independence to a remarkable degree, and falls in with the best ways of the country as rapidly as any other settler. "Give us more English settlers," was his concluding remark.

A. E. W. Mason, the English author, who was a member of the last British Parliament, discusses the Britisher as a settler in a recently published book. He points out that none of the other nations of Europe have made good colonists. The German immediately wants to drill the natives and conduct everything upon a military basis. The Frenchman depends too much upon the government at home. The British Empire is no accident, he says, but came into being from the fact that the Anglo-Saxon nature had enough independence and bull-doggedness to overcome the difficulties met with by the pioneer, and enough adaptability to harmonize with the country that had adopted him. All this we have found true in Canada, both West and East.

The advertisement in the Winnipeg Free Press has no significance, and is very possibly the result of an ill-timed joke. Indeed, it is probably an accident that a paper of the standing of the Winnipeg Free Press would allow such an advertisement in its columns. The Britisher in Canada needs no justification, for he himself is his own justification.

SENSATIONAL EXPERIENCES IN SEARCH OF A CURE

$50 FOR ONE SPECIALIST ALONE!

The varied and costly experiences of some people who suffer from skin diseases and get into the hands of so-called "specialists" are rarely heard of. Almost daily the proprietors of Zam-Buk are receiving letters of gratitude from persons who have been cured by Zam-Buk, and in many cases these letters tell a story of suffering in the search for a cure that is truly pitiful.

Mr. Arthur Fairbank, of 547 Lansdowne Avenue, Toronto, says: "Some time ago I had a bad eruption on my forehead, which I attribute to getting infected at the barber's. This eruption became very sore and spread over my scalp in the form of open sores. I went to a doctor who treated me for it Still the sores spread until almost the whole of my head was affected. As the doctor's treatment did me very little good I left it off and tried various home remedies. I also tried taking varied aperient medicines to try and cure the outbreak through the blood. Still it was in vain!

"Then I tried blood mixtures but not one of them did me any good. I was by that time in a shocking condition, and as a last resource I went to a skin specialist. He treated me for a period and it cost me over $50, but the sores got no better. They would itch and burn at times until I was nearly mad.

"One day a friend asked me why I had not tried Zam-Buk and gave me a little. That little bit of Zam-Buk did me more good than all the long treatment I had had from doctors and specialists. I immediately sent for a supply of the balm and started right in to give it a proper trial. Very soon I began to see and feel a great difference in the sores and I knew that at last I had got something that would cure me. Zam-Buk cured me and at a trifling cost. Indeed only a few boxes were necessary to do it."

Not only for skin diseases, but for cuts, burns, bruises, piles, inflamed surfaces, etc., Zam-Buk is unequalled. All druggists and stores, 50c. a box, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. Refuse imitations.

SUMMER RESORTS OF ONTARIO

Experience, the testimony of thousands, and the popularity of the several fishing, hunting and tourist districts located on the lines of the Grand Trunk Railway System, is conclusive proof that they are the Elysium of the sportsman and the Mecca par excellence of the tourist.

The "Highlands of Ontario" is a land dotted with lakes and rivers, that have their source in the northern forests, and flow until they join the vast inland seas, Superior, Huron, Erie or Ontario, whose waters are in turn borne by the broad St. Lawrence to the Atlantic Ocean. This great tourist railway reaches all the principal resorts in this vast territory, including Lakes Orillia and Couchiching, the Muskoka Lakes ,a popular resort 1,000 feet above sea level, where thousands of people annually make their summer homes for rest and recuperation. The Lake of Bays District, where some of the finest summer hotels in Canada are to be found, and a locality replete with natural beauty and loveliness with splendid fishing. Maganetawan River, the very heart centre for sport, for rod and gun, Lake Nipissing, and the French River where wild and rugged scenery is to be found, and the atmosphere filled with health giving properties. The Temagami Region, a forest reserve containing 3,750,000 acres of lakes, rivers and wilderness, the scenic grandeur of which is incomparable. Magnificent fishing and hunting in season. The 30,000 islands of the Georgian Bay is another most delightful and beautiful territory, where the most interesting trips may be taken. The steady increase of tourists to this locality is alone proof that it is becoming the most popular resort on the inland lakes. The Algonquin National Park of Ontario, a comparatively new and attractive region, little known to the lover of rod and gun and the tourist, has all the summer attractions that appeal to the denizen of the city. This territory has been set aside by the Provincial Government of Ontario solely for the delectation of mankind. The gamiest of black bass, speckled trout and salmon trout are found here in goodly numbers. Hunting is not allowed. The Algonquin Park covers an area of 3,000,000 acres, there being no less than 1,200 lakes and rivers within its boundaries.

Good hotel accommodation is found in all the districts mentioned, and a postal card addressed to the District Passenger Agent's Office, Grand Trunk Railway System, Montreal, will receive prompt attention, and illustrated publications of any of the districts will be quickly sent to all enquirers.

HAS A QUARTER OF A MILLION DOLLARS TO LAY ON JEFFRIES

Los Angeles Plunger Ready to Back Former Champion---Odds Favour the Big Fellow.

New York, April 7—Betting on the Jeffries-Johnson fight started in earnest here to-night, with a deposit of $2,000 against $1,400 that the former champion would defeat the negro on July 4th. There had been some wagering before this bet was made, of course, but the posting of 3,400 was the first real evidence that odds were going to favour Jeffries for some time to come.

Clarence Berry, of Los Angeles, at one time a prominent Klondike miner, and now interested in the oil fields of California, stated that he had $250,000 to bet on Jeffries at any price that was reasonable. Charles Sturo, a stock broker of San Francisco, quickly took $2,000 of it at odds of 7 to 10, and then announced that he would have as much more to bet on the negro before the fight.

Jack Gleason, one of the promoters of the fight, said that the odds of 7 to 10 in favour of Jeffries were first established in the San Francisco pool rooms about a fortnight ago. Gleason said that he looked for these odds to remain stationary for at least a month more, with possibly a slight shortening when Johnson commenced training on May 1st at Seal Rock House, San Francisco. After that, he said, he would not be surprised if the figures showed Jeffries a favourite of 8 to 10, with either 9 to 10 or even money prevailing on the day of the fight.

Almost all the "wise" money, Gleason added, was being placed on Johnson. The basis of this was, of course, Jeffries' long retirement, which was figured by many as injurious to his chances of regaining perfect form. Sentiment undoubtedly favoured Jeffries, he stated, and almost every white man in the country hoped that the former champion would win. But desire was not influencing betting to any great extent, was his further comment, and to the "wise ones" it was simply a question of Jeffries getting back into first-class condition.

Of the 30,000 people the promoters now expect to attend the fight, California and the other Pacific Coast States will supply 20,000, according to Gleason. About 5,000 of the remaining 10,000 will be from east of the Mississippi river, and 5,000 from between the Mississippi and the Sierra Nevadas.

BASEBALL A GAMBLE, SAYS UMPIRE EVANS

Big League Arbitrator Tells How Luck and Misfortune Change Complexion of Trades.

TURNER AN EXAMPLE

Baseball is one big gamble from any angle you may consider it. The sudden death of Alan Storke of the Cincinnati team is perhaps the latest example of this truth, says Umpire Billy Evans in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Young in years, strong in physique, a man of exemplary habits, Storke was looked on as a mighty valuable asset by Manager Griffith of the Cincinnati club. Surface conditions made it seem as if Storke was destined to be a star for many years. Yet the Great Umpire declares this young player out, long before he has reached the position which his ability entitled him to.

Clark Griffith must have felt mighty badly when a message was handed him announcing the death of Storke. That a youngster of Storke's ability should pass away just as his worth was beginning to assert itself was indeed tragic. That the Cincinnati club should lose the services of a player for whom they had paid a fancy price without getting a single return, was also a severe blow to the owner of that club as well as Manager Griffith, who is directing its destinies.

Figured in Great Luck.

Evidently Manager Griffith was very sweet on Storke, for last winter he put through a deal with the St. Louis club whereby he acquired the services of the former crimson star. Fans will remember that Griffith traded Second Baseman Mill Huggins, Pitcher Frank Corridon and Outfielder "Rebel" Oakes to the Cardinals for Pitcher Fred Beebe and Infielder Storke. At the time the deal created a great deal of comment, as to who really got the better of the argument. The final consensus of opinion seemed to be that it was a pretty even trade. Griffith was satisfied, so was Bresnahan, and the fans of each city, having implicit confidence in the men directing the affairs of their favourites, were also content.

The unfortunate death of Storke, however, gives the Cincinnati club considerably the worse of the deal. All that Griffith now has to show for Huggins, Corridon and Oakes is one player, Pitcher Beebe. While Beebe is unquestionably a high-class pitcher, it can hardly be said that he balances the ability of the trio of former Reds. Griffith took a chance, put through the deal he desired, believing he had acquired two men who would help the Reds considerably toward the championship goal, and before he even gets a chance to demonstrate the correctness of his judgment, the grim reaper spreads a cloud over the entire affair.

While Cincinnati fans are in gloom over the death of Storke, Chicago fans are much exercised over the condition of Billy Sullivan, the star catcher of the White Sox. For some time Sullivan's condition has been very critical, due to blood poisoning caused by stepping on a rusty nail, and while there now seems no doubt as to his complete recovery, still there is some question as to when he will be able to get back into the game, and play the high class of ball of which he is capable.

Sullivan's Loss Irreparable.

Just stop to think for a minute what a calamity it would have been to the Chicago Club had he not survived the unfortunate accident. Without doubt Sullivan is one of the greatest catchers in the game. It would be well nigh impossible to figure out his real worth to the Chicago team. Back three or four years, when the Chicago team was composed largely of veterans, the absence of Billy Sullivan from the ranks always created havoc to the team in general, and worked to the especial disadvantage of the White Sox pitchers. This year it seems as if the White Sox will be made up largely of young blood. Consider then, if you can, by comparison, what Sullivan's presence means to the Chicago club of 1910. It would be a blow from which Owner Comiskey would be a long time recovering.

Three years ago had the Cleveland club cared to place that wonderful little shortstop, Terry Turner, on the market he would have brought an almost fabulous sum. Turner, however, was not for sale. He was getting a princely salary from the Cleveland club, but the owners cared not—all they desired was a pennant-winning team. Just when Turner looked at his best something went wrong with his arm, for two years this great player was of little or no value to the club, and now in an effort to make it possible for him to play one of the game's best shortstops has been shifted to second base it being hoped that the short throw will not bother him.

A year or so ago that youthful phenom of a pitcher, Walter Johnson, while playing a game on the coast during the off season, was struck on the head by a batted ball. For a time it looked as if his playing days were over. He recovered, but only last season Johnson suffered an injury to his arm that was regarded at first as very serious. The husky youngster fooled Dame Fortune and bids fair to have a great season in 1910.

Johnson Not for Sale.

If Johnson was placed on the baseball market he would bring at least $10,000 with any number of clubs anxious to secure him. Considering the two narrow escapes the Washington club has already had with the youngster, one would think they would grasp an opportunity to dispose of him for so large an amount, but the owners of the Washington club are good sports, like most of the men back of the various clubs, major and minor, and they are willing and happy to take a chance.

Baseball is truly one big gamble, with the element of uncertainty always playing a prominent part. The sport is not a gamble alone to the club owners, but even more so to the players. You often hear people remark how soft it is for so little work. Well, it is fairly safe as long as you are free from accident, but the players in demand the men who can get the money are the men who take chances, men who do things. The lives of such players as a rule are short. They must get the money while they are good, for sentiment plays a very small part in baseball.

RIGHT UPPERCUT IS NOW CALLED THE BREAD-WINNER

Most of the Prominent Fighters Administer Tickets to Dreamland by Means of Such a Punch---Johnson, Wolgast, Langford all use it With Effect.

San Francisco, April 6.—Which is the most effective punch known to modern pugilistic science?

This question came up at a chance gathering of sporting notables the other evening, and when each of them present had had his way the argument remained unsettled.

Among laymen it is like the old controversy—which are the prettiest—gray eyes, blue, or brown. There are individual fancies in such matters and "you pay your compliments and you take your choice."

If you leave the question of the most effective punch to a number of prominent fighters, there is likely to be a hung-jury. Each fellow would "boost for the blow he loves best. Stanley Ketchel would say "the good old over-hand swing topples them all."

Tommy Burns, in view of the havoc it worked to Bill Squires and others, would hold that the right cross is the punch that brings home the money.

Jack Johnson would say "the uppercut for mine."

Battling Nelson would murmur, "Take what you like, but leave me the half-scissors hook," whatever that is.

Bob Fitzsimmons would probably ask time to decide which of his favourite assaults—the left shift or the solar plexus punch—wrought the most injury to an opponent. And so on.

Each of these fellows would be sincere in his ideas, for there are specialists in pugilism, as in other lines of work, and it is but natural to swear by the thing you do best.

Looking back across the years, it seems to the writer that the old familiar right cross—the crack of the dexter glove which takes a man on the chin, or maybe a trifle more toward the ear—is the blow that budding champions have been taught to pin their faith to. The lesson of decent championships, however, is that the right cross is falling into disuse. It is hard to figure out how such changes are worked, but it is just possible that time, which is always engaged in healing work, has devised so many antidotes for the right cross that modern ring men think it is a waste of time to wait for openings, and have turned their thoughts to other methods of lecture.

One who is in the habit of attending glove contests must have noticed that the average fighter elevates his left shoulder and sinks his chin directly after he strikes an attitude in front of an adversary. The pose has become almost universal, and it is the result of training camp warnings and latent fear of the dread right cross.

Other provisions against visitations from the right cross have been devised, and, as a consequence, while this famous punch is in no danger of becoming obsolete, it has been packed away in lavender for the time being. Any one doubting this has only to recall what has happened in recent glove contests of magnitude, and then a big white light will illumine the argument.

The right uppercut is considered the most effective punch known to modern pugilistic kind. A blow of that kind enabled Ad Wolgast to take the championship away from Battling Nelson. It did not send Nelson to the floor, but it bruised his face into an unlovely mass and it sapped his strength. It was the right uppercut that scored for Jack Johnson every time he faced a ring rival, and it was a right uppercut that made Sam Langford, the bogy man of both the heavyweight and middleweight classes.

Billy Papke, who is the typical fighter of the American school, is at his best when using the lifting punches, and Joe Gans in the closing fights of his career used his right in uppercutting more than in any other way.

It was a punishing blow and a hard one to circumvent, and while the writer believes it figures more in prize ring victories nowadays than any of the other punches known to the "noble art," no attempt is made to claim that the uppercut is an innovation.

There was a discussion recently in England as to the "inventor or introducer of the 'uppercut,'" and a British critic pointed out that the uppercut was in use over one hundred years ago. He said that when Sam Elias, known as Dutch Sam, and Caleb Baldwin, "The Pride of Westminster," fought in England on August 7, 1786, Baldwin used the uppercut to advantage, and that his upward blow told dreadfully on Caleb's face.

In the face of this the British sporting writer says it is absurd on the part of Jack Johnson or Jim Corbett to claim a patent on the uppercut. He is right.

KNOW YOUR COWS, DON'T GUESS

From Farm and Dairy.

When any new idea or change of method is suggested in connection with farm operations the practical owner enquires at once "does it pay?" Before deciding to commence underdraining that swampy corner, or renovating that old orchard we apply the test of figures. Before increasing the number of chickens kept, or determining to go more deeply into hog raising there is more figuring as to probable profits. Has the lead pencil been used just as often in connection with the respective merits of the various cows in the stable, and has any system of calculation of profit year by year from each cow ever been instituted? An honest confession would show a lot of very unsatisfactory guess work in connection with cows, while just a few minutes interesting use of the pencil would open the eyes of many a farmer to the remarkable differences in yields from cows thought to be just about equally valuable. Would it not be wise to admit gracefully that even the experienced have a lot to learn about cows, and that each separate individual will repay a study of her preferences and possibilities.

The question, does cow testing pay may be countered at once with the sensible query, does every cow in the herd pay? It pays to find out.

In plenty of herds are to be found cows when give twice as much profit as others in the same stable besides rearing calves that are much more valuable. Many dairymen can tell the yield from the best cows, those that do give good profits,—how many dairymen keep records of all their cows including those that might show a balance on the wrong side? Is there not the temptation to keep track of the production of cows that are doing well and are likely to make large yields and at the same time allow a few poor ones to remain in the herd and receive practically the same care, attention and feed?

The cold hard fact is that we have too long ignored the evident certainty that cows are not all alike in production or profit, but vary as much as dollar a day hotels in neighboring towns, as houses in adjoining streets, as rooms in the same house in the comfort and enjoyment offered. In our own interests we should recognise that there is the greatest difference in cows. Then we will be content to keep only those that are capable of returning profit.

MOUNT PLEASANT NEWS

Mr. Wm. J. McLean and wife of Toronto, spent their holidays at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. McLean.

The early spring weather has put new life into the farming community, who were expecting, as usual, a stormy month of March.

The great cry with our farmers last fall was the scarcity of feed, in fact a famine was on us, and especially high prices for all kinds of cattle feed. Providence is often set aside in our calculations, and we find that God moves in a mysterious way, and provides for the wants of all living in a way that man cannot foresee. "Trust in the Lord and do good and verily thou shalt be fed."

THE BUTTER SITUATION

From Farm and Dairy.

We are winding up the butter season in a rather sensational manner, with prices soaring to great heights, but only after a long protracted siege during the winter months with a comparatively slow trade, heavy stocks and a range of prices showing little margin of profit to the holders. During the past two or three weeks however the trade generally awoke to the fact that the supply of butter outside of Montreal was in a very small compass, and with no prospect of relief from the factories, which were only beginning to open up, and high prices ruling in the United States and in Great Britain presenting no opportunity for an importation of the article, the holders became very firm in their views and marked up prices at every opportunity.

During the past week prices have advanced with leaps and bounds, and at time of writing (March 26th) dealers generally are asking 30c a lb. for finest creamery; anything not strictly finest realizing 28 cents to 29 cents a lb. The trading of the past two weeks has reduced stocks to such an extent that it is feared there will be a famine of butter before the creameries begin to ship in large quantities, with a consequent further advance in prices. Prices will have to advance about seven or eight cents a pound before we can look to the United States for relief.

POST CARD COLUMN

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I have seen in your newspaper that our city father J. J. Turner, Jr., has been on the war path against the dogs of the city until he has got his by-law passed. Speaking as a dog owner I would like to say that I feel as most of the people of this city who own dogs will feel, that if our dogs have not the right to bark and run at large, why should we pay taxes for them; if they are to be kept in our back yards, having not even the right to defend our own property. This rabies affair is not, I think, of sufficient consequence to make such a valuable council as we have the centre of such a storm in a tea cup, as Mr. Turner has raised.—Yours,

"A FRIEND OF THE DOG."

"The more I see of men
"The better I like dogs."
Mde. De Stael.

Sir,—I notice that an agitation has been started in your paper in regard to the iniquitous dog by-law. With your permission I should like to add my little quota to the matter. First of all I should like to ask by what manner of right the Council has seen fit to let the by-law stand in face of the City Solicitor's doubt as to its legality. What sort of aldermen have we, anyway? Do they think that they are put in power to act as persecutors or as sane guardians of the public interest? They should be let know and in no uncertain manner that they are not put in positions of prominence to act as tyrants, but that they have been placed there to use the brains that God has given them in looking after matters of greater importance and dignity than the leashing, corralling or muzzling of man's best friend—the dog. I am indeed surprised, knowing Mr. J. J. Turner, Jr., as a member of a firm that owes its prosperity to the sporting public, to find him fathering a project which is directly contrary to the spirit of that sportsmanship to which he caters.

But perhaps, Mr. Turner is not altogether to blame. It has been whispered with how much truth I cannot say, that members of the Council who own automobiles have been as anxious as any to have this by-law passed. Would they not be better engaged in attending to the many bad crossings over which their automobiles have to pass, than in the restricting of the liberty of poor canines? Complaints are made as to dogs tramping over flower beds and doing serious damage to ornamental plots. If we would only, as a people, follow the common sense English method of fencing in our lawns, there would be no occasion for these murmurings.

I have heard many people say that they do not remember to have heard of a more crass and monumental absurdity than the promulgation of this by-law. If it is allowed to stand as it is at present I for one intend to test the legality of the same and doubtless there are many others, (possibly Ald. Morgan and Buller, who have so courageously expounded their views on the matter), who will be found on the right side when the time comes for action.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

In this land of churches it is well that we should understand the meaning of all this ceremony of dedications of churches. Is there anything in it all? many are forced to ask.

When a building is dedicated for a church it is set apart from a secular or common to sacred use, it is the place for the solemn assembly. Montgomery sings of it in the following:

Lord of hosts to thee we raise,
Here a house of prayer and praise,
Thou Thy people's hearts prepare,
Here to meet for praise and prayer.

Also Doddridge writes:

These walls we to thy honour raise,
Long may they echo to Thy praise
And Thou descending, fill the place
With choicest tokens of Thy grace.

What is church desecration? It is just the opposite of church consecration. It is to divert from sacred to secular or common use. Sacrilege is alienating to common or secular purposes what has been appropriated or set apart to religious uses. Now, my reader, don't you think that a "wayfaring man though a fool" can see that when we use the sanctuary for the purpose of holding secular concerts where the common songs of the street are sung, that that is church desecration and sacrilege of the first decree..

Have any of our church supper artists or church concert promoters a word to say for themselves before the sentence of the court of public opinion is pronounced upon them.—Yours,

JNO. CARLISLE.

HIGH COST OF LIVING.

One of the reasons for the high cost of living, according to Mr. Robert Meighen, who is no mean authority, is that people rush from the soil to the cities, and become consumers instead of producers. The land, therefore, is not forced to do its full duty. Much of it lies fallow. At the same time, all must eat. The products of the soil, being restricted, go up in price as a necessary consequence of this gravitation to urban centres.

One of the reasons why the young people leave the land is the lack of social life in the rural parts. Ingenious and constant efforts are made in old civilizations to supply this social life, which is necessary to gregarious natures; but in newer communities, in the Dominion, this is scarcely thought of. Hardly anywhere can one find social interests in the country. The labour is hard and unremitting.

Sir,—It would seem to be the duty of every patriotic citizen, to say nothing about Canadian or Englishman, to oppose this idea of industrial development.

Yours, etc.,
W. A. B.

Editor Post Card Column.

Sir,—What kind of creature can that "Doggoner" be? This dog-worshipper tells us that, in being compelled to lead his darling doggie on the street, he is being reduced to the level of a nurse girl. How dare he compare himself with a faithful nurse-girl, or his poodle with the babies of this city! The insolent fellow cannot realize that many of the most respected ladies of this country have been nurse-girls in their youth. Naturally, this fellow could not be satisfied to exercise and air his companions on more unfrequented streets—no, the "street-walker" type isn't built that way. With such a noble (?) disposition, it is no wonder that he is more concerned about a few cents taxes, than he is about the danger to innocent children, or the humiliation suffered by ladies on our streets, or the loss and annoyance sustained by our merchants, or the disgusting nuisances in public places, for all of which dear, useless curs and their selfish undignified owners are responsible.

Alderman Turner and his supporters are to be congratulated for their sense of decency and for their consideration for those who suffer from the dog nuisance in any form. I don't suppose these aldermen want the votes of those who "love" and harbour useless, destructive curs at the expense and annoyance of the respectable people of the community.

Editor Post Card Column.

Dear Sir,—Last night's issue of your worthy paper contained an article from one who is either too stingy or too old for any kind of amusement. If the morals of our city and people were never corrupted until we went to a nickel show I think we would all be saints. But, some people are too stingy to buy a ticket for such a place, but let a friend say "Come on, let's go to the show," it is all right, and when they come out the stingy one will say "Well, now, that's the best thing I ever saw in my life." Why? Because it did not cost him anything to get in. But, of course, we have to make allowances for such people. Doubtless they are church people, but tell me is it any worse to go to a nickel show and be a member of any church than it is to go into a saloon and drink, and then go to church; tell me which is the worse. Now, we young people must have some kind of amusement, even if it is a nickel show. And the dear knows, Peterborough is dull enough, now; but what would it be without our five-cent shows?

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for your space, I remain,

Yours truly,
"YOUNG BLOOD."

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

THE CLIMAX.

"The Climax," Edmund Locke's remarkably successful play, was presented at the Grand Opera House last night, thus giving Peterborough theatre-goers an opportunity of seeing the play about which so much has been heard and written. Unfortunately for themselves the local lovers of the drama failed to rise to the opportunity, as least in large numbers, and as a result lost what was undoubtedly one of the best, if not the best of the present theatrical season. The people who were there are still talking about the play to-day and no wonder, for "The Climax" has a fascination about it that causes one to sit up and is one of the most delightful offerings that modern stage craft has afforded theatre-goers.

"The Climax" is made up of only four characters and the entire action takes places at the Bohemian apartments of Luigi Golfanti, in New York. Adelina Von Hagan comes to Luigi, a voice culturist, and lives with him and his son Pietro, a young musician of great promise. Adelina is beloved by John Raymond, a young doctor, who endeavours to pursuade her to relinquish her love for art for his devotion, but she steadfastly refuses. A slight operation upon her vocal chords is found necessary and to further his own ends, and to obtain his heart's desire, the doctor, by mental suggestion, wills that she shall be unable to sing upon her recovery from the ordeal. Pietro also loves Adelina, and he has written and composed, "The Song of the Soul," inspired by her, but when she tries to sing the song her voice fails her completely. This tragic note of the play is one that makes the hearer swell up and seek refuge in tears. Believing that she can no longer become a great singer, she agrees to wed the doctor, and in the pleasant excitement preceding her marriage she discovers that she has regained her voice "and all's well that ends well." The development of the plot introduces both instrumental and vocal music, in which "The Song of the Soul" was rendered by Miss Ann Swinburne, as Adelina in an exquisite manner.

One who sees "The Climax" will never forget that moment when in the ecstacy of devotion to her art, Adelina stands up to sing, and the tones will not come. This particular episode has the relentless pathos of Greek tragedy. It thrilled the audience and produced the effect of running an icycle along one's back. Yet "The Climax" is not a "weepodrama." Women do not sob as they do when witnessing other pathetic dramas, which resort to well established stage tricks for its laughter and tears. "The Climax" is natural and human. It is electric in compelling a response from the people in the chairs. It is a dramatic pearl the brilliancy of which betokens much for the future of the American stage.

The four members of the cast proved themselves most finished artists, musically as well as histrionically, and their work at all times was smooth, natural, and unaffected. The result was a most delightful evening.

A PUBLIC LIBRARY SHOULD BE A UNIVERSITY FOR THE PEOPLE

Splendid Address Before the Canadian Club by Dr. G. Locke, of Toronto Library, on "Books and Borrowers"—Ideas That Might be Carried Out in Peterborough's New Institution.

DESIRE FOR KNOWLEDGE

Exceedingly interesting and teeming with ideas that might be carried out to advantage in the new Public Library, that is in the course of a few months, to be opened in this city, was the address delivered last evening before the Canadian Club of Peterborough by Dr. Locke, Chief Librarian of the Toronto Public Library. Dr. Locke interested his hearers for over an hour and a half. His remarks were interspersed with bits of humour that kept his audience in a most happy mood throughout. The Public Library, he said, should be as a University, educating the people and developing an intelligent public opinion. It should stand for that, almost lost art, intelligent conversation. The speaker outlined the kinds of books that should be on its shelves. By means of a library where access was given to books dealing with subjects of all kinds, a boy or young man was able to study all the possibilities in his own line of work.

About seventy-five gentlemen sat down to the fourth and last dinner of the Canadian Club, to be held this season, at the Hotel National last evening. After partaking of the excellent menu provided by Mine Host Denison, the president, Mr. H. R. H. Kenner called the gathering to order. Following the transaction of a little business, which is referred to in another column, the chairman introduced the speaker of the evening. Dr Locke, he said, was an honour garduate of Toronto University and a post graduate of the University of Chicago. At the latter and also at Harvard he had been a professor, later taking a course at MacDonald Institute, Montreal. At present, he was Chief Librarian of the Toronto Public Library. His subject, "Books and Borrowers," the chairman remarked, was very appropriate for this city in view of the fact that a new library was soon to be opened here.

The Address.

At the outset, Dr. Locke on rising to speak, stated that the chairman had forgotten to mention that he had once taught on the Collegiate Institute staff here for two months. He began by relating two or three little experiences, that had occurred during the past few days, in his work at the Toronto Library. A man once said to him "never lend a book." He remarked to him, "your shelves are well covered." The man replied, "yes, they are all borrowed." The speaker believed the inauguration of Canadian Clubs was a splendid piece of policy. Matters of national and federal character could be discussed. In daily life people depended on the newspapers and parliamentary elections. The former, he said, can't be wholly depended on, as too many articles were controlled by the business office. That was why Canadian Clubs were of such benefit.. They brought men of all walks of life together to have an opportunity of hearing speakers. There was too great lack of the perspective. Canadian Clubs were clearing houses for local and national problems.

"We are living in an age when people are being under-educated and over-specialized," the speaker continued. "All the get rich quick schemes have a counterpart in get quick education. It is an era of short cuts. There seems to be a lack of ability to handle one's self in trying circumstances. It is the records of past achievements that make future success possible and we have to go back to them. A man must keep up with contemporary problems. We need the man that can evolve things and the one that can take them and put them into use. The source of knowledge and the accumulation of records in organized form is the Public Library. There are two aspects of such an institution. It should bu ythe books that the individual can't buy—reference books. The new idea is not to store up curiosities, but to disseminate knowledge. Its active side lay in the circulation of books, in the education of the people. A Public Library ought to be a University for the people.

The average amount of education a boy or girl gets is about five years. He is a rather uneducated man. You say he can learn in the school of experience. Experience is the most wasteful of all teachers and the hardest. Ought there not to be a place where a man can go and get the results of experience? The graduates of the Public Library are the best kind of men. Is there not a desire to borrow books, a desire for knowledge? Take the correspondence schools for example. So many men and women rush into their courses. Why should not this technical education be accessible in our libraries. Boys that grow up in a place where there as no such places are handicapped. It is a tremendously commercial age, and heaven help the boy who has a "Cobalt" father or a "bridge" mother. The largest juvenile library is in the boys' hip pockets. A boy growing up wants something with life in it. You can't take a dime novel from a boy and substitute Sir Walter Scott or Dickens. You must give something along the same line as the dime novel but improved upon.

It is the height of folly to say we will destroy the saloons and the cheap shows. If we do we must put something in their place. We need constructive legislation rather than the sle[illegible] tructive. The kind of books we need was along the lines of applied science, biography, theology, political science, man's relation to the community ,and lastly fiction. There is a great deal of historical fiction that is extremely useful. My standard of fiction is, 'it is all right as long as it does no harm.' We want to promote an intelligent public opinion. We ought to read the newspapers, taking two or three English publications. In conclusion I wish to refer to our Canadian literature, but it must be remembered that we are young yet. You can't buy age, tradition or experience. It takes time to acquire them. The library should stand for that almost lost art, intelligent conversation.

A Vote of Thanks.

At the conclusion of the address, a hearty vote of thanks was tendered the speaker of the evening, it being moved by Mr. F. D. Kerr, and seconded by Mr. Robert Fair. Mr. Kerr, in his remarks, pointed out that there was much in Mr. Locke's address that could be used to advantage in the new Public Library. It should be made a vital force in the community. He hoped the Library Board would be composed of intelligent men, and the Canadian Club should see that they were.

A musical programme then followed, Messrs J. Crane, W. H. Denham, and Walter Davidson contributing the numbers.

FEARED PARALYSIS

Mr. F. A. Kratz, Schwartz, Que., writes, "For one year I was a complete nervous wreck, could not rest or sleep, had indigestion and terrible headaches and constantly feared paralysis. Six boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food made me well and strong. There is no treatment in the world so good as this for building up the nervous system."

ARCHIBALD FROWDE.

One of Peterborough's most popular young men passed away on Thursday last in the person of Archibald Frowde, of Edmonton, formerly physical director of the Y. M. C. A. of this city.

After a short illness of a week the deceased passed away in the Edmonton Hospital. For the past few months he had been secretary of the Y. M. C. A. of Welland, having moved to Edmonton, as Assistant Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. there, but six weeks ago.

MRS. (REV.) J. W. FOX.

The news of the death at Port Carling, Ont., of Bertha Laura Kidd, wife of Rev. J. W. Fox, Methodist minister, at that place, has caused deep regret in the city. She passed away on Wednesday, April 6, at the age of thirty-four. She was a daughter of Mr. A. R. Kidd, of the staff of the local Customs House, and was married to Mr. Fox eight years ago. Mr Fox has been in charge of the Methodist church at Port Carling for the past four years. In addition to her husband and four children, three girls and one boy, Mrs. Fox is survived by her father and mother, three sisters, and two brothers. The sisters are Miss Maggie Kidd and Mrs. A. Stewart, of this city, and Mrs. George Ingham of Roseneath, and the brothers are Mr. R. H. Kidd, of Port Angeles, Wash., and Mr. A. O. Kidd, of Peterborough. They will have the sincere sympathy of a wide circle of friends in the great loss they have sustained. Mrs. Fox possessed many sterling qualities and was highly esteemed by every one who knew her.

The funeral will take place on Sunday at 1.30 o'clock from the residence of her father, 45 Crescent street, to Little Lake cemetery. A short funeral service will be held at the house, conducted by the Rev. J. G. Brown, of St. James' church.

Special Dairy Number Of Farm and Dairy

Lessons that may be learned from our chief competitors in the dairy markets of the world, and with emphasis upon improvements needed in our dairy industry, constitute a feature of the Second Annual Dairy Number of Farm and Dairy, under date of April 7. "How to manage Your Dairy Farm with Increased Profits," by J. H. Grisdale, Agriculturist, C. E. F., Ottawa, is the leading article. Every dairyman would profit much from reading this timely summary of how to make the most out of a dairy farm. "Renovation of a Worn-out Farm," by Mr. Anson Groh of Preston, Ont., whose farm was a prize winner in the Dairy Farms competition last year, tells how Mr. Groh started on a poverty-stricken soil, and by means of a five-year rotation into which clover entered twice, he built that soil up to one of high production. An article by Mr. J. A. Ruddick, Dairy Commissioner, on "The Outlook for the Dairy Season of 1910" with special reference to foreign competition, is of prime interest to every dairyman, be he manufacturer or producer.

This Special Dairy Number is packed full of good things from cover to cover. Many of the articles individually are worth many times the subscription price of this journal for a year. All departments of the farm and dairy are dealt with in a most interesting and profitable way. The issue is well illustrated throughout.

Farm and Dairy has gone far ahead of all its competitors in matters pertaining to the farm and to the dairy. It is full of solid, common sense, and its articles are largely those by the most successful practical farmers in the country; such experiences as each farmer is looking for.

The special Dairy Number sells for ten cents. Subscriptions for the year may be started with this number, in which case it can be had free. Farm and Dairy for the year, including Eight Special Magazine Numbers, and its illustrated supplements goes to its subscribers weekly, all for the small subscription price of $1.00 a year. Send your orders for Farm and Dairy through this office. Be sure to avail yourselves of the many good things in this Second Annual Dairy Number.

PRESENTED WITH BROOCH

Mrs. J. H. Pue Remembered by Her Keene Friends.

A number of the ladies of the Keene Methodist church met at the home of Mrs. David Edwards, on Friday evening last, to spend a social evening with Mrs. I. H. Pue, who has left Keene to come to reside in Peterborough. After a pleasant time had been spent in songs and recitations, a presentation was made to Mrs. Pue, of a handsome brooch. The following address was read by Mrs. Nevans, and the gift was presented by Mrs. Hore:

Mrs. I. H. Pue, Keene.

Dear Sister,—We, your fellow-workers of the Keene Auxiliary of the W. M. S., of the Methodist church, having learned with deep regret that you are shortly to remove from amongst us, are met here to enjoy the evening socially with you and to give expression to our high regard for you personally, and our appreciation of the services you have rendered our society while with us. We assure you you will be missed as a kind and thoughtful neighbour, ever ready with a word of cheer and a hand of help to bring a ray of sunshine into the lives of those around you, and your self-sacrificing efforts, where occasions required, sparing neither time nor strength for the good of our society, will not soon be forgotten. And now that you are about to leave us, let us remind you that wherever your future path may lead, you will be followed by our prayers and best wishes, and we sincerely hope that while you continue to give a helping hand to all that is uplifting to others, your own life may ever be full of joy and gladness.

We ask you to accept this little gift (a brooch) as a memento of former friendships and earlier days in your Keene home, and again wishing for you and all your family a happy and prosperous journey through life and an abundant entrance into the eternal home above, where "farewells" are never said.

Signed on behalf of the Keene Auxiliary, W. M. S. Methodist church—Mrs. Wm. Johnston, Mrs. Wm. Carter, Mrs. A. E. Wood, Miss Brough, Mrs. Harrison.

Keene, April 1st, 1910.

Mrs. Pue made a reply, expressing her appreciation of their kind thoughtfulness.

PITTSBURG INQUIRY

As Result of Investigation Into Wholesale Bribery and Corruption a True Bill Is Brought In Against Max G. Leslie—Many of the 125 Witnesses Withheld the Truth Under Oath, Say the Jurors.

Pittsburg, Pa., April 9.—"We here desire to emphatically denounce as public malefactors not only the men who solicited the bribes, who held up the banks and the influential men of the City of Pittsburg, but also to denounce for their part in our city's shame the bank president or the millionaire who attempts and who causes the downfall of the poor councilman who is paid no salary for the duties he is called upon to perform for the benefit of the public."

This is a section of a statement issued yesterday by the grand jury that has been probing into the council graft.

A true bill charging Max G. Leslie, collector of delinquent taxes in Allegheny County, with bribery, was returned by the jury, and at the same time a sweeping presentment was handed down, with general charges that many of the 125 witnesses which the jury has had before it during the graft investigations thus far, have wilfully withheld knowledge of graft secrets, and that a certain few have practically been guilty of perjury. Directors and officials of some of the six big banks which profited by the corrupt depository ordinance are severely scored by the probers.

The indictment of Leslie follows his recent acquittal on a charge of perjury in claiming an alibi in connection with a previous indictment for alleged bribery. He is now charged with receiving $25,000 from the Columbia National Bank of Pittsburg on June 3, 1908. In the former indictment the date was named as June 6, and Leslie proved that he was out of the city at the time.

It was declared most emphatically that former Councilman C. Stewart and Cashier James M. Young of the Second National Bank have concealed information from the grand jury inquisitors.

"We have," the jurors reported, "been unable to ascertain who paid Stewart this bribe money (meaning $52,000 charged as furnished by the Friend-Hoffzot pool of banks), in New York. Although Stewart met this man at least upon two or three occasions, although he knew his name and had several drinks with him, he nevertheless swears that he does not remember his name."

The Tribesmen Inflict Heavy Losses On Turks

Revolt in Albania--Despatch Says They Want to See Abdul Hamid Back---Loss in Dead and Wounded is Estimated at 200.

London, April 9.—The Standard's Constantinople correspondent reports renewed fighting between the Turkish troops and the clansmen who are threatening Pristina. The Turkish losses are reported to be 200 killed or wounded, forty men taken prisoners and two guns captured by the enemy. The losses of the Albanians are unknown.

The Daily Telegraph's Belgrade correspondent says that after fierce fighting the Albanians withdrew to the mountains, pursued by the Turks, who had two officers and 40 soldiers killed. The correspondent also sends the rumor that the Turkish commander, Shevket Pasha, was wounded.

A news agency despatch from Belgrade says: Only the restoration of Abdul Hamid, the deposed Sultan, to the throne of Turkey will satisfy the Albanian tribesmen who are now in revolt throughout almost the whole extent of that province. Yesterday's despatches say that the large rebel army near Prishtina, which was temporarily checked by the Government troops under Djavid Pasha, has been reinforced and is now engaged in another bloody battle with the loyalists.

The fighting is also continuing at Ipek and Djakova, in Northern Albania. The rebels hold both of these towns, but are being bombarded by the Government soldiers.

Estimates of the killed and wounded run into the hundreds, and from the fact that there are 15,000 rebels in the field and 20,000 soldiers, these estimates are believed to be conservative. Field hospitals have been established and are crowded with the wounded.

ABUSING NEWCOMER

George H. Perley Wants to Call the Ten-Dollar-Gold Pieces "Beavers"—G. H. Bradbury Draws Attention of Minister of Finance to Appeal For Free Fruit Importation—It Should Not Be Extended.

Ottawa, April 9.—Major Beattie of London brought to the attention of the Government yesterday afternoon the treatment of new-comers to this country by immigration officials.

The special instance was that of a gentleman, well-known in London, Ont., who had sent for his father, wife, son and daughter to come to Canada. In England, his father was a farmer in good circumstances, but he sold out his holdings in order to settle in Canada. On arrival at Quebec, he had $1,000 in his purse, and the remainder in bank drafts. The son traveled from London to Quebec to meet his family. They had arrived by the Empress of Britain, but he could not discover them. After some hours' search, however, he learned that they had been locked up like prisoners, in a bare room upstairs by immigration officials.

The officials refused to open the door to the son, but on being threatened with bodily violence by the London man, who stood 6 feet 4 inches, they at last opened it.

Major Beattie suggested that the arrivals had been unfortunate in showing their wealth. He did not want to think it was a hold-up, but cases like that had been known.

Hon. Frank Oliver said he was very sorry to hear of the occurrence. The statements would receive every attention.

Dr. Clark (Red Deer) also told the Minister that immigrants to this country were being treated with very scant courtesy. During the Easter holidays a farmer delegate had told him that on his return from the old land he felt compelled to protest to the immigration officials against their discourteous conduct.

The currency bill was considered in committee. Geo. H. Perley (Argenteuil) remarked that the British gold coin was called a "sovereign," and the American ten dollar coin an "eagle." He suggested that the Canadian gold coin be known as the "castor," or the "beaver." Mr. Fielding thought custom would decide this. The bill was passed.

In committee of supply, George H. Bradbury (Selkirk) directed the attention of the Minister of Finance to the recent petition of the wholesale fruit and vegetable dealers of Winnipeg, asking for an extension of free entry of early fruits and vegetables from the United States. He hoped the Minister would pay no attention to the petition. He doubted if it would cheapen these commodities to the consumer to remit the duty. The only effect would be to enable the wholesale dealers to compel the local gardeners to accept local prices.

Martin Burrell (Yale-Cariboo), Maj. Currie (North Simcoe), and Richard Blain (Peel) also spoke in support of Mr. Bradbury's contention. The latter said that gardens and orchards in his district were growing stuff which a few years ago it was thought could not be grown in Canada.

Hon. W. S. Fielding replied that he had received a petition from the fruit growers of the Niagara district opposing the Winnipeg petition. Nothing would be done at this late period of the session to alter the tariff, but the matter would be considered in due course.

Postoffice estimates were taken up and J. E. Armstrong (East Lambton) put this question to Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux: "Does the hon. gentleman intend to increase the salaries of the railway mail clerks? And if not, why not?"

Mr. Lemieux replied that they had a substantial increase a few years ago. His intention, however, was to bring the outside service under the civil service act, and there would be an adjustment of salaries.

Miller Bill Expensive.

Ottawa, April 9.—The consideration of the Miller anti-treating bill was expensive for the country.

Introduced into the House on Nov. 11, it was given its second reading on Dec. 2, and referred to the special committee. Hearing of evidence began Jan. 18 and lasted until Feb. 18, the committee sitting 12 days and hearing fifty-six witnesses, whose fees will exceed $2,500. The printing of the evidence cost at least $1,000, even at the Government basis of a concern which does its own work; the translation of the report and evidence into French will cost at least $700; and, taking the value of the time of the House of Commons at $21 a minute, as has been estimated, it is easy to calculate a total exceeding $35,000.

This takes no note of the outside legal expenses, which will be $250 per day at any rate.

No More Time to Racing.

Ottawa, April 9.—"While we are somewhat disappointed at the result of the vote, still those in favor of the bill are not discouraged," said H. H. Miller yesterday. "While we lost in the first heat of the race, we are determined to win as many heats as are necessary to win a good cause.

"I might say this, further, that there was a most persistent lobby carried on, especially during the last two or three days, by solicitors in the employ of the opponents of the bill, particularly the Race Track Association. There are always to be found in the House of Commons, as in all other large bodies of men, a few who may be influenced by the lobbyist. This may have had something to do with our defeat."

Capt. Thomas Wallace asked the Government for an opportunity to take up his bill for the limitation of race meets.

"We have given a good deal of time to racing," said Sir Wilfrid Laurier. "I do not feel inclined to give any more."

THE PORT OF MISSING MEN

By MEREDITH NICHOLSON.

COPYRIGHT, 1907, BY THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

The task was to Oscar's taste, and he made quick work of the Servian's pockets.

"Your horse was a good dispatch bearer. You are all sound, Oscar?"

"Never better, sir. A revolver and two knives"— The weapons flashed in the moonlight as he held them up.

"Good! Now start your friend toward the bungalow."

They set off at a quick pace, soon found the rough driveway and trudged along silently, the Servian between his captors.

When they reached the house, Armitage flung open the door and followed Oscar and the prisoner into the long sitting room.

Armitage lighted a pipe at the mantel, readjusted the bandage on his arm and laughed aloud as he looked upon the huge figure of the Servian standing beside the sober little cavalryman.

"Oscar, there are certainly giants in these days, and we have caught one. You will please see that the cylinder of your revolver is in good order and prepare to act as clerk of our court martial. If the prisoner moves, shoot him."

The huge figure of the Servian standing beside the sober little cavalryman.

He spoke these last words very deliberately in German, and the Servian's small eyes blinked his comprehension. Armitage sat down on the writing table, with his own revolver and the prisoner's knives and pistol within reach of his available hand. A smile of amusement played over his face as he scrutinized the big body and its small, bullet-like head.

"He is a large devil," commented Oscar.

"He is large, certainly," remarked Armitage. "Give him a chair. Now," he said to the man in deliberate German, "I shall say a few things to you which I am very anxious for you to understand. You are a Servian."

The man nodded.

"Your name is Zmai Miletich."

The man shifted his great bulk uneasily in his chair and fastened his lusterless little eyes upon Armitage.

"Your name," repeated Armitage, "is Zmai Miletich. Your home is, or was, in the village of Toplica, where you were a blacksmith until you became a thief. You are employed as an assassin by two gentlemen known as Chauvenet and Durand. Do you follow me?"

His narrow forehead was drawn into minute wrinkles.

The man was indeed following him with deep engrossment. His narrow forehead was drawn into minute wrinkles; his small eyes seemed to recede into his head; his great body turned uneasily.

"I ask you again," repeated Armitage, "whether you follow me. There must be no mistake."

Oscar, anxious to take his own part in the conversation, prodded Zmai in the ribs with a pistol barrel, and the big fellow growled and nodded his head.

"There is a house in the outskirts of Vienna where you have been employed at times as gardener and another house in Geneva where you wait for orders. At this latter place it was my great pleasure to smash you in the head with a boiling pot on a certain evening in March."

The man scowled and ejaculated an oath with so much venom that Armitage laughed.

"Your conspirators are engaged upon a succession of murders, and when they have removed the last obstacle they will establish a new emperor-king in Vienna, and you will receive a substantial reward for what you have done."

The blood suffused the man's dark face, and he half rose, a great roar of angry denial breaking from him.

"That will do. You tried to kill me on the King Edward, you tried your knife on me again down there in Judge Claiborne's garden, and you came up here tonight with a plan to kill my man and then take your time to me. Give me the mail, Oscar."

He opened the letters which Oscar had brought and scanned several that bore a Paris postmark, and when he had pondered their contents a moment he laughed and jumped from the table. He brought a portfolio from his bedroom and sat down to write.

"Don't shoot the gentleman as long as he is quiet. You may even give him a glass of whisky to soothe his feelings."

Armitage wrote:

Monsieur—Your assassin is a clumsy fellow, and you will do well to send him back to the blacksmith shop at Toplica. I learn that M. Durand, distressed by the delay in affairs in America, will soon join you—is even now aboard the Tacoma, bound for New York. I am profoundly grateful for this, dear monsieur, as it gives me an opportunity to conclude our interesting business in republican territory without prejudice to any of the parties chiefly concerned.

You are a clever and daring rogue, yet at times you strike me as immensely dull, monsieur. Ponder this: Should it seem expedient for me to establish my identity—which I am sure interests you greatly—before Baron von Marhof and, we will add, the American secretary of state, be quite sure that I shall not do so until I have taken precautions against your departure in any unseemly haste. I myself, dear friend, am not without a certain fa[illegible]

Armitage threw down the pen and read what he had written with care. Then he wrote as signature the initials F. A., inclosed the note in an envelope and addressed it, pondered again, laughed and slapped his knee and went into his room, where he rummaged about until he found a small seal beautifully wrought in bronze and a bit of wax. Returning to the table, he lighted a candle and deftly sealed the letter. He held the red scar on the back of the envelope to the lamp and examined it with interest. The lines of the seal were deep cut, and the impression was perfectly distinct of F. A. in English script, linked together by the bar of the F.

"Oscar, what do you recommend that we do with the prisoner?"

"He should be tied to a tree and shot, or perhaps it would be better to hang him to the rafters in the kitchen. Yet he is heavy and might pull down the roof."

"Your assassin is a clumsy fellow."

"You are a bloodthirsty wretch, and there is no mercy in you. Private executions are not allowed in this country. You would have us before a Virginia grand jury and our own necks stretched. No; we shall send him back to his master."

"It is a mistake. If your excellency would go away for an hour he should never know where the buzzards found this large carcass."

"Tush! I would not trust his valuable life to you. Get up!" he commanded, and Oscar jerked Zmai to his feet.

"You deserve nothing at my hands, but I need a discreet messenger, and you shall not die tonight, as my worthy adjutant recommends. Tomorrow night, however, or the following night—or any other old night, as we say in America—if you show yourself in these hills my chief of staff shall have his way with you—buzzard meat!"

"The orders are understood," said Oscar, thrusting the revolver into the giant's ribs.

"Now, Zmai, blacksmith of Toplica and assassin at large, here is a letter for M. Chauvenet. It is still early. When you have delivered it bring me back the envelope with monsieur's receipt written right here under the seal. Do you understand?"

It has begun to dawn upon Zmai that his life was not in immediate danger, and the light of intelligence kindled again in his strange little eyes. Lest he might not fully grasp the errand with which Armitage instructed him Oscar repeated what Armitage had said in somewhat coarser terms.

Again through the moonlight strode the three—out of Armitage's land to the valley road and to the same point to which Shirley Claiborne had only a few days before been escorted by the mountaineer.

There they sent the Servian forward to the Springs, and Armitage went home, leaving Oscar to wait for the return of the receipt.

It was after midnight when Oscar placed it in Armitage's hands at the bungalow.

"Oscar, it would be a dreadful thing to kill a man," Armitage declared, holding the empty envelope to the light and reading the line scrawled beneath the unbroken wax. It was in French:

"You are young to die, monsieur."

"You are not a good churchman. It is a grievous sin to do murder."

"One may repent. It is so written. The people of your house are Catholics also."

"That is quite true, though I may seem to forget it. Our work will be done soon, please God, and we shall ask the blessed sacrament somewhere in these hills."

Oscar crossed himself and fell to cleaning his rifle.

SAVED FROM AN OPERATION

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Belleriver, Que.—"Without Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I would not be alive. For five months I had painful and irregular periods and inflammation of the uterus. I suffered like a martyr and thought often of death. I consulted two doctors who could do nothing for me. I went to a hospital, and the best doctors said I must submit to an operation, because I had a tumor. I went back home much discouraged. One of my cousins advised me to take your Compound, as it had cured her. I did so and soon commenced to feel better, and my appetite came back with the first bottle. Now I feel no pain and am cured. Your remedy is deserving of praise."—Mrs. EMMA CHATEL, Valleyfield, Belleriver, Quebec.

Chapter XIX

CAPTAIN CLAIBORNE ON DUTY.

In some mystification Captain Richard Claiborne packed a suit case in his quarters at Fort Myer. Being a soldier, he obeyed orders; but, being human, he was also possessed of a degree of curiosity. He did not know just the series of incidents and conferences that preceded his summons to Washington, but they may be summarized thus:

Baron von Marhof was a cautious man. When the young gentlemen of his legation spoke to him in awed whispers of a cigarette case bearing an extraordinary device that had been seen in Washington he laughed them away; then, possessing a curious and thorough mind, read all the press clippings relating to the false Baron von Kissel and studied the heraldic emblems of the Schomburgs. As he pondered he regretted the death of his eminent brother-in-law, Count Ferdinand von Stroebel, who was not a man to stumble over so negligible a trifle as a cigarette case. But Von Marhof himself was not without resources. He told the gentlemen of his suit that he had satisfied himself that there was nothing in the Armitage mystery; then he cabled Vienna discreetly for a few days and finally consulted Hilton Claiborne, the embassy's counsel, at the Claiborne home at Storm Springs.

They had both gone hurriedly to Washington, where they held a long conference with the secretary of state. Then the state department called the war department by telephone, and quickly down the line to the commanding officer at Fort Myer went a special assignment for Captain Claiborne to report to the secretary of state. A great deal of perfectly sound red tape was reduced to minute particles in these manipulations; it was also of a private and wholly confidential character. Therefore he returned to his cottage at Storm Springs, and the Washington papers stated that he was ill and had gone back to Virginia to take the waters.

The Claiborne house was the pleasantest place in Storm valley and the library a comfortable place for a conference. Dick Claiborne caught the gravity of the older men as they unfolded to him the task for which they had asked his services. The baron stated the case in these words:

"You know and have talked with this man Armitage; you saw the device on the cigarette case and asked an explanation, which he refused, and you know also Chauvenet, whom we suspect of complicity with the counterfeiters at home. Armitage is not the false Baron von Kissel. We have established that from Senator Sanderson beyond question. But Sanderson's knowledge of the man is of comparatively recent date, going back about five years to the time Armitage purchased his Montana ranch. Whoever Armitage may be, he pays his bills; he conducts himself like a gentleman; he travels at will, and people who meet him say a good word for him."

"He is an agreeable man and remarkably well posted in European politics," said Judge Claiborne. "I talked with him a number of times on the King Edward and must say that I liked him."

"Chauvenet evidently knows him. There was undoubtedly something back of that little trick at my supper party at the Army and Navy," said Dick.

"It might be explained"— began the baron; then he paused and looked from father to son. "Pardon me, but they both manifest some interest in Miss Claiborne."

"We met them abroad," said Dick, "and they both turned up again in Washington."

"One of them is here, or has been here in the valley—why not the other?" asked Judge Claiborne.

"Certainly not," declared his father.

"How did you make Armitage's acquaintance?" asked the ambassador. "Some one must have been responsible for introducing him, if you can remember."

Dick laughed.

"It was in the Monte Rosa at Geneva. Shirley and I had been chaffing each other about the persistence with which Armitage seemed to follow us. He was taking dejeuner at the same hour, and he passed us going out. Old Arthur Singleton—the ubiquitous—was talking to us, and he nailed Armitage with his customary zeal and introduced him to us in quite the usual American fashion. Later I asked Singleton who he was, and he knew nothing about him. Then Armitage turned up on the steamer, where he made himself most agreeable. Next, Senator Sanderson vouched for him as one of his Montana constituents. You know the rest of the story. I swallowed him whole. He called at our house on several occasions and came to the post, and I asked him to my supper for the Spanish attache."

"And now, Dick, we want you to find him and get him into a room with ourselves, where we can ask him some questions," declared Judge Claiborne.

They discussed the matter in detail. It was agreed that Dick should remain at the Springs for a few days to watch Chauvenet; then if he got no clew to Armitage's whereabouts he was to go to Montana to see if anything could be learned there.

"We must find him. There must be no mistake about it," said the ambassador to Judge Claiborne when they were alone. "They are almost panic stricken in Vienna. What with the match burning close to the powder in Hungary and clever heads plotting in Vienna this American end of the game has dangerous possibilities."

"And when we have young Armitage"— the Judge began.

"Then we shall know the truth."

"But suppose—suppose"—and Judge Claiborne glanced at the door—"suppose Charles Louis, emperor-king of Austria-Hungary, should die—tonight—tomorrow."

"We will assume nothing of the kind," ejaculated the ambassador sharply. "It is impossible." Then to Captain Claiborne: "You must pardon me if I do not explain further. I wish to find Armitage. It is of the greatest importance. It would not aid you if I told you why I must see and talk with him."

And as though to escape from the thing of which his counsel had hinted Baron von Marhof took his departure at once.

Shirley met her brother on the veranda. His arrival had been unheralded, and she was frankly astonished to see him.

"Well, Captain Claiborne, you are a man of mystery. You will undoubtedly be court martialed for deserting—and after a long leave too."

"I am on duty. Don't forget that you are the daughter of a diplomat."

"Humph! It doesn't follow necessarily that I should be stupid."

"You couldn't be that, Shirley, dear."

"Thank you, captain."

"Caught Cold."

Had a Distressing, Tickling Sensation In The Throat.

Mr. Albert MacPhee, Chignecto Mines, N.S., writes: "In Oct., 1908, I caught cold by working in water, and had a very bad cough and that distressing, tickling sensation in my throat so that I could not sleep at night, and my lungs were so very sore I had to give up work. Our doctor gave me medicine but it did me no good so I got a bottle of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup and by the time I had used two bottles I was entirely cured. I am always recommending it to my friends."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup combines the potent healing virtues of the Norway pine-tree with other absorbent, expectorant and soothing medicines of recognised worth and is absolutely harmless, prompt and safe for the cure of Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Croup, Sore Throat, Pain or Tightness in the Chest, and all Throat and Lung Troubles.

There are many imitations of "Dr. Wood's" so be sure and get the genuine when you ask for it.

Does Your Flour, Madam, Come in "One-Time" Bag?

Said she: "What do you do with the old bags?"

"Turn 'em inside out and use 'em for feed", we promptly responded.

"But", still objected the Grocer's Wife, "I've often sold bags that had been refilled by the flourmakers".

"Well, it wasn't FIVE ROSES, rest assured—was it now?" we insisted.

N-o-o, she couldn't just remember—she was forced to admit.

No wonder she couldn't remember, Madam.

Because, you see, it never happened.

A flour bag that has once been used, Mistress Housewife, accumulates all kinds of dust and dirt, germs and other undesirable citizens.

These come from freight cars, sheds, in handling, in stores, delivery wagons, and other likely places which you don't know and wouldn't care to know anything about.

These are the kind that stick — ay, closer than a poor relation.

And you can't clean a flour bag nor wash it antiseptically like a glass container, a jar or bottle, can you?

• • • •

Should the mills refill with FIVE ROSES an old returned "empty", we would be simply adding to our pure flour all the impurities, the dirt and what-not to eliminate which we are daily spending thousands of dollars.

All this, Madam, to save a few cents in bag buying!

Because, like you, we believe that cleanliness is next to godliness, especially in foodstuffs, we tell you this—

That every FIVE ROSES flour bag is a "one-time" package, which has never yet "been through the mill", which will never again contain FIVE ROSES.

A new, unused bag straight from the maker.

The best made from high-grade material, preventing leaking and sifting to an exceptional degree.

Clean, sanitary, strong, neat automatically filled and sewed.

• • • •

Since it's milled pure in an exclusive automatic, hand-proof way; packed right and kept pure till it touches human hands for the first time in your kitchen.

Is YOUR flour as pure as you want it to be?

Does it come in a "one-time" bag? For the sake of the family hearth, read the label, Madam.

See that it says "FIVE ROSES".

When you buy Paint, get the real thing

It is extravagant and foolish to buy and pay for paint, and instead of paint, get a mixture containing cheap adulterants.

Pure paint—the real thing—spreads easier, covers more surface (and covers it better) and wears longer than adulterated paint. Pure paint is far more economical to use. Pure paint gives the handsomest finish.

Pure paint insures you against paint "troubles", the cracking, the peeling, scaling, etc. that comes from the use of impurities.

"English" Liquid Paint is pure paint—made from 70% pure white lead (Brandram's B.B. Genuine) 30% pure zinc white, pure linseed oil, pure turpentine and dryer. It will give you the greatest satisfaction and save you money on your paint bill.

Insurance Companies Lose About $125,000.00 by the Wreck at Spanish River

Double Liability for About Twenty-five Persons

A loss of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $125,000 is what the Accident Insurance Companies estimate the wreck at Spanish River bridge means to them.

They figure that about 25 of those who met death carried Accident Insurance, and the average insurance, according to the tables, is $5,000. In case of death in a railway disaster there is a double liability, making the figure $10,000, or $5,000 to be more conservative.

Their loss may total more than that, for the commercial travellers, a number of whom were killed, usually carry very heavy insurance. In addition, some of the companies make the policies payable on the death of the wife while travelling, though the policy is taken out in the husband's name. In such cases they pay the husband the same amount as they would have paid the wife were the husband killed.

We issue the BEST Accident and Sickness policy offered to the public.

OUTLOOK FOR THE DAIRY SEASON OF 1910

From Farm and Dairy.

J. A. Ruddick, Dairy Commissioner

At the market end of the cheese business, we are met with the fact that the New Zealand competition has been gathering strength during the past two or three years, owing to the extraordinary increase which the exports of cheese from that country have shown. We have heard a good deal about this lately and its significance may have been somewhat exaggerated. The total increase from New Zealand is not nearly as large as the decrease in Canadian shipments, so that it has not resulted in overstocking the market.

The New Zealand season of 1909-10 is now approaching its end. The first shipments were very heavy, but bad weather during the summer has interfered somewhat with production and the increase for the season will not be as large as was expected from the showing during the first two months. According to New Zealand advices, the combined shipments of butter and cheese from that country are not expected to be very much larger than last year.

GREAT BRITAIN'S HOME PRODUCT

While New Zealand cheese is practically the only cheese of its kind imported into Great Britain in competition with Canadian, the home production of England and Scotland, which exceeds the total production in Canada, must always be considered. The Cheddar make of cheese in Great Britain is fairly constant and like any other product which is regular in supply, does not appear to affect the market from year to year to any great extent. The Cheshire cheese, however, has, during recent years, been more of a disturbing factor, because there has been a considerable increase in the output, with the result that this cheese is now found on markets where it was formerly unknown. They are beginning to make Cheddar and also Cheshire cheese in Holland, but so far, the quantity exported to Great Britain is very small and cuts but very little figure. On the whole, the imports of cheese into Great Britain have decreased of late years, with the result that consumption is now more nearly up to production than it has been for many years. Our summer cheese is now in demand for immediate use and it behooves Canadians to see that it is properly cured before being shipped. There are still very loud complaints against the immature character of much of the Canadian cheese which reaches the consumers. A Cheddar cheese must have time to acquire its characteristic flavor before it is consumed, otherwise the taste for it will surely decline.

SIBERIAN EXPORTS

With one exception, the countries of Europe are very constant in their output of dairy produce and for that reason, they claim very little attention in market forecasts. The exception referred to is Siberia, from which country shipments of butter are increasing at a tremendous rate. Fortunately, the ever growing demand in Germany absorbs a large proportion of the Siberian exports, which are now second in quantity only to those of Denmark.

The Australian supply which consists of butter only, is always a little uncertain, owing to climatic conditions. In New Zealand, with more reliable weather conditions, the output shows a steady increase and it depends largely on the relative price whether the increase is in cheese or butter.

PROFITS OF MIDDLEMEN

At this time when so much is being said about the profits of middlemen and the disparity between the price received by producers and that which is paid by consumers for the same article, it is worthy of consideration that there is probably no farm product for which producers receive a larger proportion of the price which is eventually paid by the consumer than is the case with cheese and butter. Cheese is very frequently retailed over the counter in Great Britain for practically the same price as is paid to the factories in Canada. Not that I think that is a matter for congratulation, because it points to an unhealthy condition in the trade, but it shows that the producers of cheese are getting a larger share of the final proceeds than are the producers in many other lines. This is an encouraging feature of the dairy industry from the view point of the farmer.

OUR HOME MARKET

Markets and market conditions abroad are of the highest importance in relation to any commodity of which we have a surplus over and above our own requirements, because the price which can be obtained for the exported article is what rules the market for the whole production. We should not, however, lose sight of our home market for dairy produce, because we consume in Canada fully three times as much in value of milk, butter and cheese as our total exports amount to.

The home market is expanding at the rate of about $2,000,000 a year, or in other words, the home consumption of milk, cream, butter and cheese amounts to $18,000,000 or $20,000,000 more than it was in 1900. If we put this sum against the increase in our exports, we have a sufficient answer to those who would have us believe that there has been a decline in the dairy industry. There has been no decline on the whole, nor is there any reason why there should be.

POSSIBLE PRODUCTION IN 1910

Any discussion of the outlook for Canadian dairy produce would be very incomplete without some reference to the probabilities of production in Canada, for the reason that as far as cheese is concerned, Canada is the most important factor in the International dairy trade.

The conditions in Canada at the present moment are more favorable for dairy production than they have been for some years past. Cows are wintering well and there is no scarcity of feed reported. If the present indications of the coming of spring are realized, an early beginning will have an important effect on the season's production. We had three late springs in succession following winters with a short feed supply, a combination that has had a marked adverse effect on milk production during the last two or three years. There is no use, however, counting chickens before they are hatched, and the spring of 1910 may be quite as unfavorable as any previous ones, in spite of all signs to the contrary at the time of writing.

FACTORS THAT MAKE FOR INCREASE

There are two factors at work in Canada which make for increased dairy production apart from what may be called the natural increase or the opening up of new territory. I refer to the improvement of dairy herds, based on the testing of individual cows, and to the better provision which is being made for winter feed and for supplementing the pasture during periods of drought.

The work carried on through the Dairy Division of the Department of Agriculture for the encouragement of cow testing has so far been in a large measure educational. We are beginning to see some results, and these results will encourage greater activity along this line in the future.

One of the most encouraging features of the movement is the large number of requests that are received from individual farmers throughout the country for the blank forms used in keeping the records. Apart from the cow testing associations, hundreds of farmers are now testing their cows independently, as a direct result of the propaganda which has been carried on since 1905.

The total production of milk used for all purposes in Canada has an annual value of between ninety and one hundred million dollars. It would be quite possible to increase this quantity by at least 20 per cent. in a few years without increasing the number of cows. Several farmers have already attained that result by two selections under the present cow testing movement. If a similar improvement were general, it would mean a total increase of twenty million dollars or thereabouts—a sum equal to our total exports—to be added to our dairy revenue. Such an increase would be almost clear profit.

Ordered to Hospital

FOR OPERATION FOR ACUTE INDIGESTION—DID NOT GO AND WAS CURED BY

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

The doctors seem to have made the common mistake of dosing the stomach when the real source of trouble was with the liver and kidneys. Anyway Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills made a complete cure and here is the record:

Mrs. F. O. Bacon, Baldwin's Mills, Que., writes: "I was very sick and the doctors said I must go to the hospital for a surgical operation. I had acute indigestion and the liver and kidneys did not act. I did not want to undergo an operation so I began the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills and have used them ever since.

"I am feeling well now and doing my own work for a family of seven. I think there is no equal for acute indigestion and liver and kidney troubles such as I had and they and nothing else made me well again. There is no medicine I like half so well, for this did wonders for me."

The real serious cases of indigestion almost always have their location in the bowels and can only be reached by making the liver and kidneys active. No medicine regulates the liver, kidneys and bowels so nicely and so promptly as do Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, all dealers; or Edmanson Bates & Co., Toronto. Do not be satisfied with a substitute or you will be disappointed.

A MIRACLE IN MANITOBA

CAPTAIN BANISTER STRICKEN WHILE IN CAMP

HAD TO BE CARRIED TO TRAIN. HELPLESS IN BED FOR SIX WEEKS

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" COMPLETELY CURED HIM AFTER DOCTORS FAILED

Captain Banister's letter reads like a page from the History of Miracles. It is one of the strongest endorsements ever given to any medicine in the world.

Captain Nelson Banister of Oak Lake is known from one end of Manitoba to the other—in fact, throughout Western Canada. Naturally, the letter of such a prominent citizen and officer is bound to carry convincing weight with all thinking people.

OAK LAKE, MAN., June 15th, 1909.

"Fully appreciating the great benefits that I have derived from using your wonderful remedy, I feel it is my duty to write you a little history of my case and ask you to publish it, for the good of some others that may be today suffering from the complaint that I am happy to say, "Fruit-a-tives" completely cured me of.

About two years ago, while in Camp at Brandon with "A" squadron, 12th, Manitoba Dragoons, I was stricken with Sciatica and Neuralgia of the muscles of the heart. I was so bad that I had to be carried to the train and sent home, and after being again carried from the train to my bed on arrival at Oak Lake, I was forced to stay there six weeks. Doctoring and nursing in time enabled me to get on my feet, but I could do no work, and was almost as helpless as when confined to bed. A sample of "Fruit-a-tives" came to our house about that time and I tried them. Believe me—that from the first dose I experienced great relief and continued taking them until I was as well and strong as ever. This satisfactory change and restoration to health, I attribute wholly to "Fruit-a-tives", and I never miss a chance to recommend them to my friends and neighbors.

Previous to taking "Fruit-a-tives", my heart was examined by doctors and found to be so weak that it was considered unsafe for me to take chloroform, or any anaesthetic, but since taking "Fruit-a-tives", the heart has become so strong that I was able to have a minor operation on one of my hands and took chloroform without any ill effects. Today the whole family uses "Fruit-a-tives", we purchase them from Mr. Graham, our local druggist, keep them in the house all the time, and just simply could not get along without them. They are the best medicine in the world."

Truly, the days of the miracle have not passed way. When these small fruit tablets can do what physicians, with all their skill, cannot do, it does seem almost miraculous. Yet nothing is more logical and scientific than the medicinal action of "Fruit-a-tives".

Sciatica, Rheumatism and Neuralgia in any form are caused by poisoned blood.

It is the duty of the Bowels, Kidneys and Skin to rid the system of waste matter, or urea. If any of these organs are weak, the waste matter stays in the system and is converted into uric acid.

It is uric acid which poisons the blood and inflames the delicate nerves, membranes and muscles, causing what is known as Rheumatism, Sciatica or Neuralgia.

"Fruit-a-tives" promptly cures these troubles because "Fruit-a-tives" cures the Bowels, Kidneys and Skin. "Fruit-a-tives" makes these three great eliminating organs well and strong. And when the waste of the body is regularly disposed of, there can be no excess of uric acid.

"Fruit-a-tives", as Captain Banister says, "is the best medicine in the world." It is made of fruit juices and valuable nerve and heart tonics, and is pleasant to take.

50c a box—6 for $2.50, or trial box, 25c. At dealers or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

TALES OF THE CHINA SEAS • No. 6

By Foxcroft Davis

WHEN the sun shines and the wind whispers softly, the magnificent harbor of Hong Kong is a regular show place of Neptune. In the pale glimpses of the morn the old fellow with his trident and his crown of sea shells may be seen rising from the waves of silvery green and grinning with delight at the number of his junks, rafts, liners, cruisers, battle ships and their attendant vessels. For ships require attendants, from the launches, those maids and valets of the war ships, to the parent cruiser, which takes care of her troublesome family of torpedo boats, which must be mothered and protected from the wicked destroyers.

Neptune, however, retires to his ocean caves when the typhoon signals are hoisted, and the ships scuttle off, sometimes a couple of hundred of them, to sheltered places, where they huddle together like frightened sheep until the signal from the tower comes down.

The monsoon, however, had succeeded the typhoon period on a brilliant October morning when Trevor, a lieutenant commander of the most recent vintage and looking like a pretty boy of twenty-five, hoisted his flag over the despatch boat Seagull at Hong Kong for a cruise up the Choo-kiang River to look after some consular affairs. The ship was to stop at a town called by the Chinese Kwang-tung and by all the rest of the world Canton—a town of a million cutthroats, some mandarins and a handful of Europeans and Americans, and dearly loved of sailor men.

Trevor had had one or two commands, about as big as a rencup, but the Seagull was a big thing for him, though she did not quite reach the eighteen hundred ton mark. She had a complement of ten officers and 107 men, and only lacked a chaplain to be really important. She was a pretty thing in her white dress and buff funnels, and could log it at a lively gait when she had coal that suited her digestion.

Trevor got the ship by a series of shifts and changes incident to a foreign station, and he calculated that he would keep her for at least six months before another series of shifts and changes would take him out of her. He could have gone to the European station, but the East had cast her spell over him. He was learning both the Japanese and Chinese languages, and wanted six months more before he could express all the feelings of his soul in Chinese and Japanese, and here was a chance in which everything was combined that could give him joy. His executive officer was Bruce, a red headed, capable man, whom Trevor admired and trusted and hated cordially. His former chum at the United States Naval Academy, Halkett, three classes below him, was merely a watch and division officer.

Trevor, however, meant to be kind to him and told him so, the first night, when they dined together in the captain's cabin—cosey places are these captains' cabins. And as if nothing were wanting to complete Trevor's joy, that first dinner showed that the Japanese cook, Hoshi, and the Japanese boy, Satsui, and the Chinese steward, Hop Sing, were all precious legacies left by Trevor's predecessor. The dinner was selected, cooked and served in a manner simply ideal; the table, with its soft glow of candles and vases of scarlet gladiolus, was a dream. And Emily Cotesworth, the Admiral's daughter, was at Canton with her father, and Trevor felt his chances of winning Admiral Cotesworth's good opinion would be much improved by giving him a dinner selected by Hop Sing, cooked by Hoshi and served by Satsui, the beautiful Japanese boy.

Japanese or Chinese?

All Japanese look alike unto most people, and so do all Chinese; not so to Trevor. He made a brief but searching scrutiny of his domestic staff and concluded it would be well to keep from them the fact that he was fairly fluent in both the Japanese and Chinese languages. Hop Sing had a name like a laundryman, but had no other characteristics of that calling.

Trevor noticed a strand or two of yellow silk in the queue that hung down Hop Sing's back and was tucked in at the neck of his snow white blouse. His hands were exceedingly delicate, and Trevor noticed that the right was "a writing" hand—a thing easily detected. The thumb is enlarged and the middle finger is shaped to the handle of the pen. Hop Sing's inflections, too, smacked of the schools. As for Hoshi and his brother, the beautiful boy Satsui, Trevor never had the least doubt of their caste. Hoshi was as ugly as the boy was beautiful. He was short, with preternaturally long arms, but had perfectly military carriage and a walk no civilian could imitate. Satsui, however, was thoroughly unmilitary in every way, and judging by the delicacy of his small hands had never done any work of any kind. His eyes, which had only a faint upward slant, were of a velvet blackness, his skin clear and smooth as old ivory, and he had a set of perfect teeth that gleamed as he smiled his slow, lazy and incomparably winning smile. In short, Satsui was a regular pocket Adonis after the Japanese model.

Trevor reasoned the situation out easily enough. There is much poverty in China and Japan. A Chinese professor and a Japanese naval officer get about enough to keep body and soul together on an economical plan. Hoshi and Hop Sing might both be spies—Satsui was nothing but a pretty boy with a taste for decorating a table and a sinuous grace of movement and a faint odor of rose perfume about his hair—or all three of them might simply be gentlemen desiring to make a living as best they could. After all, a spy could do no harm on a well regulated ship. They could only tell what everybody knew—that the discipline was good, the target practice the best in the world—in short all those things which make an enemy loth to attack.

Nevertheless Trevor thought it well to unpack his own kit and to take his Chinese and Japanese grammars and histories down to Halkett's room and to ask that friend of long syne to take care of them. This was late in the evening, after the delicious dinner, and before Trevor took his final cruise around the ship to see that all was safe for the night.

It was a bright moonlight night, the placid moon reflected in the waters and showing the great city of ships lying quietly at anchor, their lights making sharp points like stars in the veiled brilliance of the day. The monsoon was at hand.

Down in Halkett's room, a hole which he shared with another man, Trevor deposited his Japanese and Chinese books in Halkett's chest of drawers and charged Halkett to lose the key. Then, closing the door, Trevor began to ask some questions. Through the open port they could see the wide waters of the harbor and the crowded shipping; the naval anchorage was but sparsely inhabited.

"You ought to see Bruce," said Halkett with a delighted grin. "I don't believe he has slept four hours at a stretch since he found you were coming to the ship. Work, work, work, day and night. He was just eleven minutes at dinner to-night, I happen to know."

Bruce and Trouble.

"And I was sixty-three minutes at mine. Bruce, you know, would be my choice as executive. Very desirable man," said Trevor in a commanding officer's voice.

"Oh, Lord!" cried Halkett in raptures, "I'd give a month's pay if Bruce could hear that tone in your voice. But Bruce is a first class man, and I would rather Bruce should have the deck than any other man in the wardroom when there's trouble brewing."

"Don't be afraid, Halkett," said Trevor kindly. "I don't mean to be a father to you and I don't mean to take advantage of any little slip you may make and report you to the Admiral."

"Thanks, awfully," was Halkett's dutiful response, "shall I knock my head nine times on the floor, as the Chinese Viceroys do before the Empress?"

"Oh, no indeed, just tell me all the ship news, I don't know anything that has happened down here since I went up the Yang-tse in January."

"Dull as ditch water, except I think we have a larger complement of officers than the regulations allow in this ship. Japanese, you know."

"Ah!" answered Trevor, "this grows interesting. Proceed."

"I think your cook outranks you. It strikes me that he is a commander at least, and a nobleman besides. One of our Japanese boys in the wardroom, I believe, is a midshipman. He was on shore leave last week and came back to the ship drunk. Your cook, Hoshi, was in the boat with him, and hauled him aboard. The boy blubbered and called the cook 'Excellency' and 'Baron.' The cook in return gave him a thundering beating, and the boy—Bottle of Beer is his name on the ship's books, the Japanese name being too complicated for every day use—appeared next day with a black eye. The doctor asked him where he got it, and he answered, 'Hoshi, he give me hell.' Your Chinese steward saw and heard the whole business and twice since has called your cook by the name and title, grinning. And they've had a scrap each time, in which the Chinaman got worsted."

"Where was the master-at-arms?" asked Trevor, sharply, in the first flush of a commanding officer's responsibility.

"Sitting by the forward hatch reading the Ladies' Home Journal," replied Halkett. "It is the unwritten law in this ship that when scraps occur among the black or yellow races the master-at-arms is not to be disturbed until everything is over."

"How many Japanese and Chinese are there in the ship?" asked Trevor.

"About a dozen all told. Bruce doesn't like them and they have a grudge against him, so the wardroom boy lets out when he gets drunk. By the way, Bruce's fiancée, Miss Egerton, is here with the Cotesworths—came from Manila with them. But I don't think Bruce has seen much of her."

"And he will see less," answered Trevor darkly. "I like the society of Miss Cotesworth, and I can't leave a lot of boys like you to keep ship, so Bruce will have to spend much time aboard, while we are in Hong Kong."

The Dinner Party.

Trevor kept his word. Miss Egerton proved most agreeable, and as she was Emily Cotesworth's guest, Trevor gave a dinner in honor of the two girls. With Hoshi, Satsui and Hop Sing dinner giving was a merry jest. Of course Bruce had to be asked, and so was Halkett and another junior, as mates for a couple of English girls. Emily Cotesworth was easily the loveliest girl present. Miss Egerton looked, as did Emily Cotesworth, a perfect type of American beauty. The two English girls, with their abundant hair done up in buns, warranted to spoil the beauty of a Venus, and voices of inexpressible sweetness, were also fair types of the daughters of Albion. Bruce, who was a bashful man, kept as far away from his fiancée as possible, and appeared relieved when he found himself placed at the other end of the table from her.

Everything was most promising, except that Satsui appeared to have more attar of rose upon his sleek black hair than was altogether agreeable in a small cabin. No mention was made of the state of affairs between the charming Mary Egerton and Bruce out of regard for Bruce's feelings. But Hoshi, whether he had a grudge or not against Bruce as the tipsy wardroom boy said, contrived to make the executive officer wretched during the whole dinner.

When the soup was served Miss Egerton found in her plate a beautiful heart made of sugar candy stabbed with an arrow and tipped with a large B, while Bruce saw floating in his plate a similar heart tipped with an E. Bruce's complexion turned as red as his hair, and although the temperature was only about ninety-five it felt to him in the neighborhood of two hundred.

"I swear I'm innocent," said Trevor. "My acquaintance with the cook is still too recent for me to know of these accomplishments."

After that the fish course was handed. This time the blushing Bruce and the smiling Mary Egerton received heart shaped portions ornamented with love birds made of sugar candy and labelled respectively B and E. Bruce was evidently in torture.

With the roast duck came another painful surprise. Hoshi had managed to construct a couple of Cupids out of cucumbers, with bows and arrows of sugar candy, and a bandage made of a rose leaf over their eyes. By that time even the two English girls had discovered the joke and were softly laughing, while everybody except the unhappy Bruce was in raptures of amusement. The rest of the dinner was only a long succession of hearts, darts and Cupids.

It was all very amusing until the guests were gone and Trevor and Halkett were having a final cigar on the poop.

"Your cook took it out of Bruce," said Halkett.

Trevor felt slightly uncomfortable. To be innocently anxious to please and to be playing tricks on the executive officer are two things.

Next morning Hoshi was sent for and Trevor curtly informed him that no more sentimental decorations were to appear on the cabin table unless ordered. Hoshi took this with his best military bow.

"It shall be as Your Excellency pleases. I only wanted to do Honor to Your Excellency's guests."

"By the way," said Trevor, Hop Sing being out of hearing, "how do you and Hop Sing get on?"

"Perfectly well, sir," replied Hoshi. His accent was remarkably good and his tone that of one gentleman reassuring another.

"No bad blood for what happened in 1894? You ought to be satisfied with having given Hop Sing and his people a good licking then."

The Sun Off the Flag.

A flash of light came into Hoshi's black eyes as he replied softly:—

"We did lick."

"Why didn't you make the Chinese take the sun off the flag?" continued Trevor, meaning to make Hoshi talk. "You know they put it there two thousand years ago, meaning that the Chinese dragon had swallowed the Japanese sun, and there it has stayed ever since."

A rapid grin like a streak of lightning passed over Hoshi's yellow face.

"It is no matter," he said. "The Land of the Dragon stands still. The Land of the Rising Sun goes forward. Hop Sing, when he speaks to Satsui and me, still calls us Wo, which means the Submissive People, and when the treaties of peace between his country and mine were made the Chinese named us in them still as the Submissive People."

This species of information from a cook of any other race than the Japanese might have been called surprising, but nothing is surprising in a Japanese.

The week in Hong Kong sped away, and seven days later the Seagull was trailing up the river toward the Boca Tigres, which is the best the Portuguese could make out of "Tiger's Mouth" in Chinese. The Cotesworths and Miss Egerton were also going up to Canton for a week, and the prospect was most alluring to Trevor and the bashful Bruce.

The run to Canton was made in a day. Trevor had Halkett in to the twelve o'clock breakfast. The wardroom cook was not particularly good and Trevor felt it would be a sin never to share Hoshi's rissoles and salads and other delicacies. Halkett's gratitude was touching.

When breakfast was over Satsui handed the cigarettes on a silver tray, with tiny gladiolus blossoms fringing it. After the boy had left the cabin Halkett said:—

"Handsomest Japanese boy I ever saw—but he runs too much to perfume and flowers. This cabin smells like the Garden of Gul. What is it?"

An idea came to Trevor.

"It is the perfume that Japanese ladies of the highest rank use. How did the boy get hold of it?"

"My dear fellow," replied Halkett, "you have a suite of persons of much higher rank than anybody in this ship, and don't you forget it."

Even as they spoke the cabin was flooded with an odor of roses almost intolerable in its sweetness, but it came from without, not from within. Trevor touched his bell and Hop Sing appeared.

"What is it?" asked Trevor holding his nose, while Halkett put his head outside of a port.

"A black man who waits in the wardroom got hold of Satsui's bottle of attar of rose and rubbed it into his wool. Satsui told Hoshi, who gave the black man hell all the day."

"Send Satsui and the black man to me," Trevor ordered.

In came the black man, Ananias Green, a wardroom attendant and a native of Chinquapin Ridge, Va. Ananias' skin had turned the peculiar ashen color which shows when a negro is thoroughly alarmed, and his wool exhaled the perfume of a million roses. Behind him came Satsui, trembling, and with tears in his eyes.

"Look, my captain," wailed Satsui, showing a tall, slender glass bottle, holding a couple of gills; "the black creature took my attar of rose, of which a single drop is perfume for one person a whole day, and rubbed it all—all—all—in his hair!"

"I 'clar fo' Gord," stuttered Ananias, "I ain' n-n-never see Satsui's ashes of roses. I ain' never tetch that bottle—I ain' got one single drap on me"——

"Shut up," said Trevor, "I'm Southern, and when you begin to "'clar fo' Gord,' that means you are lying from the start. And you haven't put a drop of perfume on your head? Ha! ha!"

Trevor might laugh. Not so Satsui, who said in a voice broken by sobs:—

"It is a perfume used only by ladies of the highest rank in Japan, and he, this creature of black skin, has dared to use it—has dared to use it!"

"Cap'n, I 'clar fo' Gord"—— Ananias began again.

"Take him to the barber and have his hair clipped and his head parboiled," were Trevor's orders, and they were as nearly obeyed as feasible without endangering Ananias' life.

On the Seagull.

Satsui looked so tearful still that Trevor said to him kindly:—

"Was the rose perfume so valuable?"

"It was very valuable, my captain, and to think the black skinned creature should have it all!"

"Why, if it is reserved for ladies of rank, do you dare to use it?"

Satsui smiled a mysterious and beautiful smile, showing his small and perfect teeth.

"It was a gift to me, my captain. My brother Hoshi does not want me to use it, but I do not always obey Hoshi. Hoshi, however, did give the black man hell, for which I am glad, for I love justice."

"I am sorry for your loss, Satsui, but glad to get rid of the perfume. It has bothered me ever since I came aboard."

In the late afternoon of the day they had left Hong Kong the Seagull reached Canton and found a comfortable berth at the naval anchorage. Three hundred yards away lay a big Japanese battle ship, whose fourteen thousand tons made the white Seagull look like a yacht. On the battle ship's stern were gilt letters like those on a tea box, which being interpreted meant "The Conqueror of the Sea."

The Japanese are well up in naval etiquette, and by the time the Seagull's anchor had kissed the mud a launch put off from the battle ship and a little Japanese lieutenant about five feet in height came aboard the Seagull with the usual compliments that one war ship pays another on its arrival. The captain of the Conqueror of the Sea sent his compliments to the captain of the Seagull and desired to know if he could be of service, &c.

Trevor, at first sight of the Japanese lieutenant, wanted to pinch himself to find out whether he was awake or dreaming, drunk or sober, for Lieutenant Ityo, of the Imperial Japanese Navy, as his card read, was apparently Satsui dressed in a Japanese naval uniform.

There was the same slenderness and grace, the same long, soft, black eyes, the same red lipped mouth, the same exquisite teeth. Lieutenant Ityo was, next to Satsui, the handsomest Japanese Trevor had ever seen, and he had seen many.

He was so staggered by the strange resemblance that it was with difficulty he had self-possession enough to return the usual compliments.

Halkett, who had the deck at the time; two midshipmen, the paymaster, and in fact everybody who saw the Japanese lieutenant, noted the extraordinary duplication, as it were, of Satsui. Hogan, the mail orderly, whispered to a passing marine:—

"Have we stole a Japanese lieutenant, or has the Conqueror of the Sea stole the captain's boy, begorra?"

Lieutenant Ityo's visit was short, and as the Japanese launch sped past Trevor, Halkett, the two midshipmen, the paymaster and Hogan saw a sleek, black head and a delicate, ivory white hand outside the cabin port and making strange motions. And from the launch where the handsome Ityo sat, his sword across his knee, came an answering motion of the hand. Halkett heard the commander's voice in his ear.

"Queer likeness, wash't it?" said Trevor. "I think they are brothers."

"Twins," answered Halkett.

There was plenty for the Seagull's officers to do in the way of calling and receiving visits, with the Japanese battle ship, two English cruisers and a French war ship all bowing to each other at the naval anchorage.

Trevor watched to see signs of perturbation in Hoshi and Satsui, and saw them plainly in Satsui. Neither asked leave to go aboard the Conqueror of the Sea. Nevertheless Trevor suspected that both of them went aboard on the sly. Trevor dined on board the Conqueror of the Sea, and could have sworn, if he had not once seen his Japanese boy and Ityo at the same time, that he was sitting opposite Satsui in a Japanese naval uniform.

In returning this hospitality to the Japanese officers Trevor included Lieutenant Ityo in the dinner party. He said nothing in the presence of either Hoshi or Satsui to show that Ityo was to be present, but himself wrote the name cards and put them around the table.

There were to be ladies to dinner—Emily Cotesworth, Mary Egerton—but Trevor had given Hoshi warning that no symbols of love were to be used. Satsui was arranging the flowers with his usual taste when his eye fell upon the card inscribed "Lieutenant Ityo." Instantly his countenance changed. He hesitated for a moment, and Trevor caught a glimpse of Hop Sing's intelligent face wearing a grin of delight.

The Bandaged Hand.

Without saying a word Satsui skipped into the galley where Hoshi presided. Five minutes afterward he came out with his right hand bandaged.

"It is most unfortunate, my captain," he said, "but I have just burned my hand—and a bandaged hand does not look nice in serving a dinner."

Trevor did not believe a word of this and neither did Hop Sing. Suddenly Hop Sing seized Satsui's hand and tore the bandage off. There were some red marks on it which might be a burn and might be made with cochineal such as bakers use. Hop Sing dipped a napkin in water, wiped the red marks off, and lo! Satsui's hand was, as usual, like ivory.

Satsui made no resistance in the hands of the big Chinaman and stood mute when his fraud was exposed before Trevor. Trevor was much annoyed.

"No more tricks, Satsui," he said sternly; "no more lies."

"We all tell lies sometimes, my captain," said Satsui humbly in reply to this.

Then the guests were arriving. It was a party of twelve and was a tight fit for the Seagull's cabin. Bruce was present, looking much alarmed, and Miss Egerton, very roguish and smiling.

Emily Cotesworth was at her loveliest, and there were a couple of other European ladies of Canton. Lieutenant Ityo was promptly on hand with the captain of the Conqueror of the Sea, whose aid he was. Just before dinner was announced Satsui entered, bearing on a silver tray bouquets for the ladies. The sight of him compared with Ityo caused a shock of surprise to thrill the little group of Americans and English. The Japanese, who smile when they speak of a dead child and sing while they cut themselves open before the door of an enemy, remained unmoved.

The amazing resemblance between the handsome boy and the handsome Japanese lieutenant was so obvious that it cast a certain awkwardness and restraint over all present. It is not pleasant to be spied upon, and the thought in the minds of all was that the beautiful Japanese boy who was the double of the Japanese lieutenant was there for a purpose. The conversation was strained, and the dinner, which should have been extremely merry, was tame and conventional.

When the guests were gone and Trevor had deposited the last laughing girl in the launch he returned to the cabin and sent for his boy.

"Satsui," he said, "you are Lieutenant Ityo's brother. His twin, I think."

"I swear to you, my Captain," he said, "I am not Ityo's brother. I will send for Hoshi, who is my brother, and he will swear that I am not Ityo's brother, and we will swear to you the oath that binds us here and forever."

Trevor called Hoshi, who came in.

"Tell the captain I am not Ityo's brother," cried Satsui with tears.

"I swear to you," said Hoshi, likewise getting down on his knees, "that Satsui is not the brother of Lieutenant Ityo. And I swear that he was never in the Japanese navy, and knows nothing of any navy, except waiting upon your serenity in this cabin."

And then they both swore the awful oath that binds the Japanese, and Trevor believed them.

Others who knew not the Japanese so well disbelieved the story, and it was whispered through the ship that the commander's boy was a brother of the captain's aid on the big Japanese battle ship.

The week at Canton was gay, as gay as Hongkong, and Trevor was sorry when the day came that the Seagull had to leave. She was to go up the river to see about some consular matters and would be gone several days.

On the first night, as the ship was leisurely moving up the river at a thirteen knot gait, Trevor, who had smoked his after dinner cigar on the poop with the other officers, had chosen to return to his cabin. As he approached he heard voices—Hop Sing's low gutturals and Satsui's laughing, piping treble. They were speaking in Japanese and Hop Sing was saying:—

"What if I tell the Captain?"

"Tell what you like," answered Satsui. "There are many ways of getting off a ship without waiting for her to anchor."

"If you will be kind to me"—— Hop Sing was saying.

The Severed Queue.

The next moment Trevor stepped within the cabin in time to see Satsui pick up the scissors on Trevor's desk and with one clip sever Hop Sing's queue, of which the long end was buttoned inside his jacket. Hop Sing seized Satsui by the arm at the same instant the door of the pantry opened and Hoshi appeared, while Trevor moved into the gleam of the swinging light. A dead silence followed.

"It is a woman," said Hop Sing. "She is the wife of Hoshi; they have promised to kill me if I tell, but it is true."

A light broke in upon Trevor's mind.

'And the twin sister of Lieutenant Ityo," he said to Satsui.

Hoshi and Satsui had begun a faint protest, but at that they stopped, and Satsui, with a sidelong glance at Trevor, smiled broadly, showing her beautiful white teeth.

"I don't want you around here any more, Satsui," said Trevor shortly; "to-morrow morning we will reach Kwo-tung and you can go ashore. Hoshi will go too."

Hoshi at this bowed and wished his excellency long life and happiness, and so did Satsui. Hop Sing had a light of triumph in his eye.

Trevor, after a few minutes, went again on deck. He felt annoyed and disturbed, and amused too. How cleverly had he been played by these two! His suspicions as to their real rank had proved correct, although he had been thoroughly humbugged in other ways. He had no doubt that everything Hoshi had observed would go to the Navy Department at Tokio; but that was of little account.

There was nothing secret in the Seagull, and after all it was quite likely that Hoshi was simply a naval officer reduced to cooking for a living. For Japan is very poor and a Japanese naval officer when not employed must have rice to live upon.

The night was still and soft and radiant with a great vivid golden moon. The ship swept on steadily, the swish of the water under her keel making music. Trevor made no mention, as he sat smoking with the other officers, of the upheaval in his domestic staff. He was full of regrets for Hoshi, but as for that impudent Satsui, as she called herself, he had nothing but imprecations.

It was nearly midnight when he went below to turn in. But he felt disinclined to sleep and threw himself on the transom, with a pillow under his head and a book in his hand.

The cabin had never got quite free of the rose scent, and it seemed stronger to Trevor's imagination than ever before. After half an hour's reading he began to be drowsy, the book dropped from his hand and he felt himself slipping into a delicious doze. Then, as in a dream, he saw Satsui sitting by him. She wore a skirt of white silk, embroidered in gold, and a kimono of heliotrope silk, also richly embroidered, as was the scarf around her waist. Over her hair, cut short like a boy's, was a Japanese head dress, which is nothing more or less than a wig, and glittering ornaments shone upon her head, and in her ears and around her neck. She knelt by Trevor's side, and, taking the scarf from about her waist, softly enveloped him in it.

The odor of the roses became sickening. It dulled Trevor's senses and paralyzed his limbs. He wished to move, to throw her off, to call for help, but he could do none of these things; he could only see the shining of Satsui's eyes and the gleam of her teeth as her thin red lips were parted in a smile. Then he could no longer keep his eyes open, and he drifted off into a river of dreams and perfumes that led to an ocean of forgetfulness.

When he waked he found himself in semi-darkness. The electric lights were turned out, and the light from a moon grown pallid and sickly stole in at the port and half lighted the cabin. Trevor struggled to his feet, turned on the electric light and looked at his watch. It was a quarter-past three in the morning.

His limbs were still heavy, but his mind was perfectly clear, and being used to working methodically and promptly in emergencies did so now. He walked unsteadily to the door of his sleeping cabin and went straight to the metal safe built in the steel walls of the compartment. In this safe were kept the ship's papers, valuable memoranda and the private signal book, for which an officer must answer with his honor, if not his life. It is a book of no value to anyone except an enemy, but if it falls into the hands of that enemy any naval ship may be lured to its destruction, officers and men may fall into a trap that means annihilation. Sometimes it has been stolen, and once in the history of navies it was sold by an officer under the spell of a woman. He was publicly disgraced and imprisoned for life, and was thought to have got off well without being shot.

The Lost Signal Book.

Trevor opened the complicated lock of the safe. The signal book was not there. He searched for it carefully. Only the day before it had been there and there had been no communication with the land since they left Canton. So the book of private signals was either still in the ship or at the bottom of the river.

He rang his bell at once, which meant that Hop Sing, the steward, should appear. Then he rang it twice, which was the call for Satsui, and next he rang it three times for Hoshi. In two minutes they were all standing before him in the brightly lighted cabin. Satsui was wrapped in a kimono.

"Where is the private signal book?" said Trevor looking full at Satsui.

"The private signal book?" repeated Satsui sweetly. "I do not know what Your Excellency means."

"I had my hand upon it yesterday morning," replied Trevor. "Last night about midnight as I lay here half asleep you came into the cabin dressed as a woman, and I inhaled a perfume and knew nothing for a time. Then it was you took the signal book."

"Pardon," said Satsui, "but Your Excellency was dreaming. I am the wife of Hoshi, and do you think he would let me come into a man's room at midnight?"

"Where is the signal book?" repeated Trevor.

"I do not know what you mean," she replied.

"I know what His Excellency means," said Hop Sing. "The private signal book would be worth much to Lieutenant Ityo, and his twin sister would not let him want for it."

"Go," said Trevor. "At seven o'clock bring me the private signal book."

Hop Sing, Satsui and Hoshi bowed themselves out of the cabin. Trevor, who was dressed just as he had been the night before at dinner, opened the port and inhaled the cool night air. The moon was sinking dismally and gave forth a faint and ghastly beam that shone mournfully upon the water and then dropped below the horizon. The darkness descended and the ship, stealing softly on her way, seemed to be the only thing that lived in a world of black sky and blacker water. Overhead Trevor could hear the steady tramp of the deck officer as he walked up and down. No sound came from the lookouts, the sleepless watchers in the ship that keep silent guard while others sleep.

Trevor watched from the port the black night turn to the gray light and the wind of dawning ruffle the water and turn it from a blackness like the Styx first to steel, then to silver, and at last the splendid sunrise made it all molten gold, flecked with pearls and diamonds.

The ship's bell struck two, and it seemed a call to life. Instantly the morning watch tumbled up on deck. There were sounds of scraping and scrubbing, the ship's bath had begun, that universal bath which she receives all over, followed by her toilet.

The sound of the bells had hardly died away when Hop Sing came in from his pantry and laid the signal book down on the table before Trevor, and on it was a small, white object. Trevor gazed at it curiously; it was a small, beautifully shaped white front tooth. Trevor looked at Hop Sing inquiringly.

"It is Hoshi's wife's front tooth," said Hop Sing, calmly. "Hoshi and his wife have not failed to remind me that they did lick us in 1894, and that the Dragon on the Chinese flag has not yet devoured the Sun of Japan. But the Japanese are not the only clever people. I went from the cabin to the doctor and waked him up and told him I had an aching tooth that must come out. The doctor swore at me, but got up and took his forceps and pulled out the tooth—a great one, that took all his strength to move. There were several pairs of forceps, and while the doctor was pulling the tooth—and it was not easy to pull—I took a pair of forceps that I thought would fit a front tooth and hid it in my shirt.

"The doctor, still swearing, went back to bed, and I went to Hoshi's bunk. He heard me coming and sprang up, but he had no knife, and I had the carving knife, sharp like a razor. I said, 'Satsui, come with me. I will not harm a hair of your head, but unless you come I will kill your husband with this knife.' The Japanese are liars, but they know the Chinese are a truthful people, so Satsui got up out of her bunk and said, 'I will go with Hop Sing. If he does me harm, you, Hoshi, will kill him,' which Hoshi promised. Then I took Satsui into my pantry and bolted the doors, and, holding her by the head, I pulled out one of her beautiful front teeth. There it is. She wept, but did not shriek. I said, 'You will bring me the signal book for the captain, or I will pull out all your teeth—and Chinamen tell the truth, and do not lie, like the Japanese.

The Torture.

"She continued weeping and saying, 'I do not know where the signal book is.' I picked up a little mirror and showed her her own face in the glass. Then she wept more than ever, but still she said, 'I do not know where the signal book is.' I held her head and put the forceps on another front tooth, and she said, 'The signal book is thrown overboard.' I said, 'I will pull another tooth and throw it overboard to keep company with the signal book.' And then she held up her hands clasped and I took the forceps out. I went with her, back to where Hoshi lay still, with my knife in my hand, and Satsui, still crying, knelt down on the floor and lifted up a piece of flooring and handed me out the signal book. I gave her the mirror, and she sat on the edge of her bunk and wept and wept, while I went to my pantry and locked the door and stayed there until now."

Trevor obeyed an uncontrollable impulse to clasp Hop Sing's hand and said:—

"Thank you, from the bottom of my heart."

The next minute the book of private signals was locked up where it was wont to repose.

At seven o'clock Hoshi brought Trevor his coffee. There was not the slightest change in his looks or manner, and he remarked unconcernedly that Satsui had a burning fever and could not stir for pain.

"Send Satsui to me," replied Trevor.

In a couple of minutes Satsui appeared, dressed in her boy's clothes. Her face was pale and drenched with much weeping and her hands trembled, and there was a pitiful gap in her beautiful white teeth.

"Satsui," said Trevor kindly, pointing to the tooth that lay on the table, "there is a clever American dentist in Canton and he can take this tooth and put it back where it came from. Not to grow, you know, but he can fasten it in cleverly and you will still have your beautiful teeth."

Satsui fell on her knees and started into fresh weeping.

"Oh, how good Your Excellency is! I stole the book because my brother told me it would be good for our country, and I would die for my brother and our country. And I would have died rather than give it up, but I could not stand the disfigurement, and when Hop Sing told me that I should lose all my teeth, all my beautiful teeth, I was a coward, my heart fainted within me and I went and got the book. Do anything you like with me, but spare me my teeth."

Trevor, whose own nerves were shaken, could not help laughing.

"Never mind, Satsui," he said, "the book is here, but you and Hoshi must leave the ship as soon as we reach Kwo-tung."

"Thank you, thank you!" cried Satsui. "And will you forgive me? The perfume did you no harm, but only made you sleep."

Trevor could have forgiven anything now that the private signal book was restored.

The Seagull at noon sailed into the broad, bright harbor of Kwo-tung, and the launch was put into the water to fetch the mail. In the launch sat Hoshi and Satsui. Hoshi professed to be going to the markets, not caring to buy from the market boats that soon crowded around. Satsui was to carry the basket containing the market produce, as it was beneath the dignity of Hoshi, as the captain's cook, to carry it.

As the launch was about to steam away Trevor came down from the bridge and flipped a round golden eagle at Satsui in the launch.

"That is to get a new tooth, Satsui," he called out, and everybody wondered.

Neither Hoshi nor Satsui returned to the Seagull, and during the rest of his six months' cruise Trevor secured the services of Ananias Green and his coadjutor, Charles Sumner Pinchbeck, who were promoted respectively to the positions of captain's cook and captain's boy. Hop Sing remained and enjoyed Trevor's highest consideration.

CO-OPERATIVE EGG HANDLING

From Farm and Dairy.

W. A. Oswald, Two Mountains Co., Quebec

The profit that there is in shipping strictly fresh, clean, fair-sized eggs regularly, both direct to consumers and grocers, or dealers in the city of Montreal, induced me to ship some of my neighbors' eggs along with my own to save expressage. That is how I came to branch out into the business of handling fresh eggs, to a limited extent, from some of the patrons of our creamery. I shall outline the working of our system and some of its advantages so that others who have to do with creameries or cheese factories, may decide whether or not they care to take up the work.

We set the age limit for oldest eggs at not more than four or five days old during warm weather in summer time, and from eight to 10 days in winter time. This is the outside limit for eggs that will be shipped.

We keep from only 35 to 40 laying hens ourselves. Our winter quarters are too small to keep more and besides I have not the time to devote to keep a larger number. We run a dairy farm of 180 acres. We tap considerable over 2,000 maple trees each spring. I have an apiary that gave me 2,500 lbs. of surplus honey for sale last year. These all demand considerable attention during the spring and summer months. So to get a few cases of fresh eggs to ship at intervals with my own to supply a certain demand, and to cut down expenses in shipping, I started three years ago to form a little syndicate or circle among some of my neighbors.

EXPRESS RATES

We are charged by Dominion Express Co., 35 cents for a 12 dozen crate or basket, for a distance of 27½ miles to city. The same company will carry two 30 dozen cases for 44 cents, with a charge of five cents extra for every case to get empties returned. Hence the advantage of shipping in large cases and in large quantities.

The members of our circle furnish me all their eggs at country store prices. By getting cash in hand they are willing to take a little extra trouble in gathering the eggs each day promptly and to keep them bright and clean and in a cool place until shipped. It may be noted that I have had to drop out some members of our circle, who were careless in trying to put in eggs from stolen away nests and some others would not go to the trouble or small expense of using china nest eggs, but would pretend to have a good ordinary egg and change it each succeeding day. A few others again will persist in keeping little mongrels of fowls that lay small white eggs. These of course cannot be handled to advantage.

GATHERING THE EGGS

Some of our members furnish themselves with a 12 dozen basket or crate. I provide another one, and exchange my empty on certain days each week as per arrangement when we meet at the creamery or cheese factory. With half a dozen others who live in a line along the roadway, I leave some empty cases on the way out and collect them with the eggs on the way back, these calls being made frequently while on other business trips.

I re-sort, or grade the eggs to a certain extent, and do all the marketing, or shipping myself. All shipments are made in 30 dozen cases as a rule. I have some little circles of conaumers formed in the city where a few private families co-operate and club together and take a 30 dozen case between them about every 10 days.

I have often thought of asking each member producer to provide himself with a rubber stamp and stamp his initials on each egg, as collected, but with the members that I have in my circle and who have been supplying me with good eggs and giving fair satisfaction in every way with their goods, I almost think it would be an insult to ask them to stamp their eggs. If I were branching out more largely in the business, however, I would certainly insist on some method of stamping in order to know the eggs that come from each individual producer.

HIGHER PRICES

Different parties living in three or four neighboring townships, have frequently requested me to take their eggs and ship with ours but my other duties as I said before prevent me from branching out on a larger scale just at present. I see no reason to prevent almost any creamery or cheese factory patrons however, from having their eggs handled in this way. They would get at least from two to four cents more a dozen in summer time from first-class grocers, butchers, or dealers and more than double that amount of increase from private families, if the right goods are furnished. Furthermore, they would get cash in hand, instead of having to run store accounts and giving eggs in exchange for frequently high priced store goods.

Western Ontario farmers in general have an advantage over us in being able to procure winter eggs. Our hens are confined and snowed up for about five months, whereas climatic conditions are more favorable to Western farmers and they could ship their eggs to Montreal where first-class grocers and butchers would be glad to get them at 50 cents a dozen during two months, or at least part of December and January each year, 10 or 15 cents less during another two or three months if the eggs were marketed in proper condition.

TWELVE PRUNING RULES

From Farm and Dairy.

Summer pruning is best for shade trees.

Use the pruning knife freely on the tops of weak and declining plants in order to give them a new start.

Don't prune until after the blooming period.

By cutting back the heads of young plants, a thicker, broader growth is encouraged.

Never cut downward on a limb, a ragged wound is usually the result of so doing.

When planting shrubs, cut back the branches one-half, to balance the root system.

To produce a low-headed fruit tree, trim off all branches and cut back the top to 18 or 20 inches at planting time.

To avoid crotches in mature trees, remove all limbs in two-year-old trees that form crotches with their neighbors.

Don't forget to cover the wound made by pruning with tar or common paint, preferably drab.

Do not depend upon winter pruning to keep formal shrubs in shape. They will never look well. Prune two or three times during the summer.

Remember that summer pruning induces fruit-bearing, while winter pruning encourages a heavy growth of wood. Summer pruning should be light, however, and pruning in winter is often necessary in any case.

It is much better to cut away a little wood each year than a large amount occasionally. Begin when the tree is young and you can shape it in any way that you desire. Remember that a low-headed tree is easier to spray and easier to pick the fruit from than one whose branches are high in the air.—"Countryman", Brant Co., Ont.

Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured Mr. F. McAuliffe's Lumbago.

Lachute Man, After Fourteen Years Suffering, finds Health and Strength in an Old, Reliable Kidney Remedy

Lachute, Que., April 8.—(Special).—After fourteen years of suffering which started from pleurisy, followed by dropsical swellings, and culminated in lumbago, and confined him to his bed, Malachi F. McAuliffe, a well-known resident of this place, has entirely recovered his health, and he says without hesitation, "I am sure I owe it entirely to Dodd's Kidney Pills."

"I was laid up with pleurisy, which affected my kidneys," Mr. McAuliffe continues. "I suffered a great deal of pain, especially in my back. I was also terribly troubled with dropsical swellings, and, finally, after many attempts to get rid of my trouble, I found myself compelled to give up and was confined to my bed with Lumbago. I tried many medicines but they failed to do me any good. Then I turned to Dodd's Kidney Pills, and, after taking one box I felt greatly relieved. I took several more boxes, and found myself completely cured."

RATIONS FOR COWS UNDER TEST

From Farm and Dairy.

M. H. Gardner, Supt. Advanced Registry, Delavan, Wis.

I am often asked by inexperienced breeders, desiring to test their cows officially and enter them in the Advanced Register, as to what Holstein-Friesian breeders feed to get such fine results as are shown in every issue of the reports. Feeding dairy cows for best results simply means the feeding of such an amount of digestible nutrients of the several kinds as their organisations demand for milk-production, energy, and growth; noting well the digestive and productive capacity of each animal, so that she shall not be overfed. Feeding can never become an exact science that can be learned from books or teachers, or in any way short of actual experience, because it deals with living animals, of which each has her own individuality.

Fed, as is a usual thing, on less than they are capable of consuming to advantage, cows may not show much of individuality in the choice of food; but each has hes likes and dislikes, which the successful feeder must study if he would so feed as to bring the cow to her full productive capacity. Also her digestive and assimilative powers must be considered. Clover hay, for instance, would furnish all the nutrients needed, if the cow would consume and digest within a given time a sufficient quantity. But she can not; so the nutrients must be furnished her in a more concentrated and digestible form, and the cow must only be given as much clover hay, or other coarse forage, as her nature as a ruminating animal requires, the main dependence of the feeder being the concentrated elements of the plant found in its seeds.

A more concentrated ration than could be made from the use of seeds as a whole is obtained by the use, as a part of the ration, of those portions of the seeds left as by-products in the manufacture of whiskey, beer, glucose linseed and cottonseed oils, etc; for these by-products contain proteids in much greater proportion than do the whole grains. It is thus easy to compound a ration in which the proteids and carbo-hydrates shall bear a proportion of about one of the former to five of the latter; a proportion which has been found very favorable in stimulating milk production. Every experienced feeder has his own preferences as to feeds and his own formula for combining his ration; but for the use of inexperienced feeders, I will give a formula formerly used and found good in my own herd: 100 lbs. each of ground oats, coarse wheat bran, and gluten feed, well mixed with 33⅓ lbs. each of corn meal, linseed oilmeal and Ajax Flakes, making a mixture of 400 lbs. in weight. Clover hay, alfalfa hay, and corn silage are fine for coarse feed; but in the line of succulency and the making a ration palatable, nothing will be found quite equal to pulped beets.

Palpitation of the Heart.

One of the first danger signals that announce something wrong with the heart is the irregular or violent throb. Often there is only a fluttering sensation, or an "all gone" sinking feeling; or, again, there may be a most violent beating, with flushings of the skin, and visable pulsations of the arteries.

There may also be experienced a smothering sensation, gasping for breath, and feeling as though about to die.

In all such cases the action of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills in quieting the heart and restoring it to its normal beat, is, beyond all question marvellous, as our thousands of testimonials will show.

Mrs. Martha Mason, Marlbank, Ont., writes:—"Just a few lines to let you know what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have done for me. I have been troubled with weakness and palpitation of the heart, would have severe choking spells and could scarcely lie down at all. I tried many remedies but got none to answer my case like your pills did. I can recommend them highly to all with heart or nerve trouble."

The Ingredients Used In NA-DRU-CO

Medicinal and Toilet Preparations are of the same high quality as those your druggist uses in filling your physician's prescriptions.

The National Drug and Chemical Company supplies the greater part of the drugs dispensed by the physicians and druggists of Canada, and it is probable that the ingredients used by your own druggist in his prescription work came from our warehouses.

From these same warehouses come the ingredients used by our expert chemists in compounding NA-DRU-CO preparations. Every ounce of material used in every NA-DRU-CO article is the best that our skilled buyers can select from the world's markets.

ALWAYS LOOK FOR THIS TRADE MARK

We Can Afford

to use only the very best materials because, buying in immense quantities for our wholesale trade, we get the best crude drugs at rock bottom prices. In our chemical laboratories these raw materials are refined and prepared by expert chemists and subjected to rigid tests both for strength and purity before being used in NA-DRU-CO preparations.

NA-DRU-CO Cod Liver Oil Compound, for instance, is made from the best of materials, by our expert chemists, and is consequently the most perfect tonic. NA-DRU-CO Nervozone is another striking example of the results our skilled chemists get from good ingredients.

We Could Not Afford

to use any but the finest and purest materials in each and every NA-DRU-CO preparation, because on the quality of each depends the future of the whole line. Linked together as they are by the NA-DRU-CO Trade Mark, a single article found unreliable would go far to destroy your confidence in all NA-DRU-CO goods.

Ask your druggist about the quality of the drugs we supply to him—about our facilities for compounding superior medicinal and toilet preparations—about our reliability.

Go a little further if you like, and ask your physician or your druggist what goes into NA-DRU-CO preparations. They can tell you, for we will furnish to any physician or druggist in Canada, on request, a full list of the ingredients in any NA-DRU-CO preparation.

"Money Back"

Furthermore, if any NA-DRU-CO article you buy does not entirely satisfy you, return it and your druggist will refund your money.

If your druggist has not the NA-DRU-CO article you want in stock he can get it for you within two days from our nearest wholesale branch.

HOW TO KEEP MILK OVER SUNDAY

From Farm and Dairy.

Kindly tell us how to build a refrigerator that we could set our milk cans in over night and Sunday, during the hot weather. It is claimed that the milk should be cooled as soon as possible after it is drawn from the cow. If all would do that, then we could get more cheese from the same amount of milk and that the butter fat left in the whey would be so small that the whey butter business would be cut out.—W. A. F., Prince Edward Co., Ont.

If your correspondent wishes to build a more complete cold storage than the one recommended in bulletin No. 20, which gives a description of a very convenient combined ice house and milk stand and which can be had free on request I would be very glad to send him plans.

Ice can be secured almost any place in Ontario and should be stored for cooling cheese factory milk, especially the Saturday nights and Sundays milk.

COOLING MILK WITHOUT ICE

If there is an abundant supply of cold water available on the farm, milk may be kept from Saturday night until Sunday morning without ice by setting the milk cans in a tank and surrounding them with cold water. The water must be as high as the milk in the cans and the overflow for the water should be near the top of the tank. The water from this overflow can be used for watering the stock.

To cool milk with water, I would recommend building a small milk house near the stable or place of milking. This house should have a good cement floor and drainage provided, so that it can be kept sweet and clean. In it have a water tank large enough to hold the milk. A hay fork track with pulleys, etc., can be arranged to lift the milk cans out of the tank and run them out on to the milk waggon.

To keep milk sweet from Saturday night until Monday morning, it should be cooled as quickly as possible after milking to under 60 degrees and kept at that temperature. The cover should be put on the can as soon as milking is finished.—Geo. H. Barr, Chief, Dairy Division, Ottawa.

Its government buildings are fine. Its fame is far-reaching, and many remember with pleasure the hours spent within its hospitable walls. The charges are based on the American and European plan, and are as follows:

HEALTHY CHILDREN

Psychine Made Her A Robust Child

It is not necessary for us to speak any words of our own, for the facts given below are strong enough to convince the most skeptical as to PSYCHINE'S power to restore health.

Mr. John Sykes, of Victoria Harbor, says:—"When Nellie was about 4 years of age, she commenced wasted away so much that she looked like a little skeleton. The doctor treated her for 2 or 3 months, but the child got worse, and the doctor said he could do nothing more. We called in another doctor who told us every thing had been done and that the child could not get better. We decided to take the little thing to a Montreal doctor, who said her lungs were filled with pus and that she would have to undergo an operation if we would save her life. The next day he came down from Montreal and operated upon her, but the operation was a failure, as he was unable to get any pus from the lungs.

"We were disappointed, and fully thought little Nellie was not going to get better, but it was cruel to let her suffer so. At this time we heard what a wonderful medicine PSYCHINE was for the lungs. We had been reading some of the advertisements in the papers of people who had been cured through PSYCHINE. We thought it would suit our little girl, and so decided to give it a trial. This we did, and after Nellie had taken the first bottle we saw an improvement. Gradually the little girl began to fill out, and by the time we had used 8 or 9 bottles, she was quite well. That was two years ago, and she is as well and robust to-day as the other children are.

"We have a great deal to be thankful for. We firmly believe little Nellie would never have lived if we had not heard of PSYCHINE. We shall be pleased to answer enquiries at any time."

"HILLS OF THE WIND"

A Short Story.

A new organ in the sitting room of Peloo Trout's hotel indicated the full advancement of Silver City.

Red Meekins, who had come in from his claim, the Big Pine, sat in a chair beside the proprietor listening to the travail of the organ. Presently he turned to Trout and remarked, "That Singer Tomato is a hummer at the melojun, Peloo."

"That's a organ, Red. 'Taint one of 'em hinky-dink melojuns," Peloo reproved with considerable asperity, "an' the gent that's workin' it ain't a vegetable—his name happens to be Senor Tomasso. He's a Italian musicianer in the theater."

"Where's that other Italian was here, Peloo?" Red queried in the way of covering his defeat.

"Which one? There's such a slue of guests puttin' up at the Trout House now."

"Lamonte was his name."

"He was a Frenchy, an' he went out perspectin' for the Lost Mine. Leastwise I kinder got that give me on the side."

Tomasso had struck up "The Suwanee River" with its infectious swing, and a dozen voices took up the refrain in twelve separate keys.

"There's been a feller shot up," Slack announced.

"Was he a white man or a Dago? Them Dagoes is always carvin' theirselves?" Red asked.

"Hank Speers has gone out for him," Slack answered. "I heerd it was that loony feller Lamonte, that was wild goose chasin' after the Lost Mine up in Keewatin Hills."

"Kinder queer about 'em hills," Peloo observed solemnly. "I don't take no stock in ghosts; but there ain't nobody monkeyed with that Lost Mine Injun story but what's got the wu'st of it. Big McLean got drowned in the Devil's Pool lookin' for it, an' 'em two half-breeds, Descoigns, they got shot up, an' nobody never knew how."

"Yes, there's a whole bunch of fellers killed, or broke a leg, or spent their last dollar an' never got nothin'," added Red.

"That's ol' woman's yarns!" Slack growled disdainfully. "I'd go up there in a holy minute if I thought there was any gold. There ain't nothin' up there, not even the evil speerits the Injuns tell about."

"Terrible purty name 'em hills has got," Red observed.—"'Hills of the North Wind,' Injun for the same bein' Keewatin. Most too purty a name for a nest holdin' only goblins an' evil speerits."

The organ groaned dismally as Tomasso prepared for a fresh assault. When he had touched their sympathies with "Starlight and been carried off to receive his reward at the bar, Peloo said:

"Well, fellers, I wouldn't bet again' both propositions. Gold's been brung out of 'em hills, because I seen it, an' I'm danged if you could bribe the feller to go back again or tell where it was."

"Did he get scairt?" Red queried.

"He must've seen somethin'."

"Who was it, Peloo?"

"Felix Gouin."

"He's a French breed, an' I would not believe one of that tribe on oath," Slack offered. "A breed would run a mile if an owl coughed in the dark. Guess that's what he heerd, an owl."

"Kinder think it was Gouin that put it inter Lamonte's noddle to go huntin' for that Lost Mine," Peloo said reflectively. "They was thick as two thieves here for about a week."

"If he did, Peloo, an' Lamonte's been shot up, looks as if there was somethin' in the Injun's story about bad luck strikin' anybody that butts inter their fam'ly ghost business," Red suggested.

"They was both nutty," Slack sneered. "I see that Lamonte about here, an' I figgered he was off his chump. I wouldn't be afeared to go up inter 'em hills the darkest kind of a night."

"Danged if I would," Peloo declared emphatically, "an' I ain't afeared of anythin' that wears hair! I've heerd more'n one feller that was jus' as full of grit as you are, Slack, say they'd heerd some dang queer noises in 'em hills at night when they was camped on Duck Lake."

"Talkin' of speerits," Red interjected, "there is a happy land not far away. Come on, boys, let's suppose that bar's the Kewatin Hills, an' take a fall outer 'em speerits."

"What about us gettin' back to the Big Pine? She's growin' late, Red," Slack asked.

"Soon's we've had a drink, Slack, you can slip out an' get the ponies, an' we'll hit the trail for the Big Pine," Red replied.

"Better'n it uster be, Peloo, when we had to drink lemon pop," Red said, removing with the back of his hand a dew that lingered in the stubble of his rufus moustache. "Let's go an' hear Tomato—what d'you say his name was, Peloo?"

"I'll write it on your shirt cuff, Red."

"Only fellers in the hotel business can afford b'iled shirts," Meekins retorted. "'Em movable kind of cuffs you've got, Peloo, is fu'st rate where a feller's travellin' light as to his shirt."

Slack and Downs had laughed at Peloo's sally because he was master of the bar; because Red had stood treat they now laughed at his retort.

The hilarity was interrupted by the advent of Constable Hank Speers. He was dripping wet. "It's an awful night!" was his first greeting. "Give me a pint of dryin' fluid, barkeep."

"Is she rainin', Hank?" Red asked foolishly.

"Rainin'! Do I look like it? It's a nice, lovely, moonlight summer evenin', only Egg Lake an' the Montreal River is havin' a ketch as ketch can wrastle up there in the Valley, an' I got too clost." Then Speers turned to his revivifier with a quiet assumption that Red's foolish question had merited the reply courteous.

"Did you get that feller that somebody plugged?" Peloo asked.

"Yes, an' the feller what plugged him, too, I guess."

"Gouin! It was Lamonte was shot, wasn't it?"

"Yes, and I nabbed Gouin sence I come back. I guess you can help, Peloo. I want to use that feller that's havin' trouble with the pianner in there—Tommy. I'll tell you what I want, Peloo." The Constable drew a small sheet of paper from his pocket and spread it out on the bar, continuing, "I got this in Gouin's pocket when I dropped on him. You see 'em spots on it?"

"Look's like blood," Peloo surmised.

"I figger it is. An' that's music wrote on it, isn't it?"

Peloo scanned the paper intently, and then announced that it was music.

"Well, a breed don't carry music round with him as a reg'lar standby, an', there bein' blood on it, I figger Gouin took that outer Lamonte's pocket when he shot him. That's a thumbprint in the corner."

"Lamonte was all the time monkeyin' with the organ, an' I see him one day makin' a plan of music on paper. Guess you're right, Hank."

"What did he want to kill a feller to get a bit of music for?" Red asked. "I heerd of a feller up north that shot a Scotchman for playin' the bagpipes; but that was kinder to get rid of music."

"You got me, Red," the Constable acknowledged in a perplexed manner; "I can't make it out, neither. But there wasn't nothin' else touched on Lamonte. He had a watch an' some money. He was jus' lyin' there in the pass leadin' into Keewatin Hills, lookin' as if he was asleep, an' there was a hole bored through him commencin' at his back."

"I was thinkin'," the Constable went on, "that it might be a good idee to get Tommy there to kinder size up this music that's wrote here."

"What for?" Peloo asked.

"I don't know exactly; but it's the only clue we got. I read a lot of detective stories, an' sometimes a feller's run to earth by a bit of paper—only clue they had, too. If it's a letter, they get what they call a writin' expert, an' bein' music I guess Tommy there is the only feller in these parts that knows anythin' about it."

Peloo took the paper in his hand, saying, "I'll ask Senor Tomasso to see what he can figger up about it."

"I wouldn't say nothin' to him about where she comes from," Speers cautioned.

Tomasso looked at the music that Peloo handed him, assumed his most professional air placed it on the organ, and ran a few notes with one hand. "Curious," he said, "I can't remember it. Think it's by Wagner."

"Lamonte was the gent's name," Peloo blurted out, then stopped suddenly in confusion at a sharp glance from the Constable.

"Don't think it," objected Tomasso. "I'll bet drinks for the house it's Wagner!" and again he made little tentative excursions up and down the keys with his fingers. "Listen to this, gents," he said finally, and with elaborate fingering he played.

Tomasso was a fair performer, also considerable of a poser; so he threw his whole capacity into the weird refrain. The organ wailed and reverberated. The barbaric quality of the music cut into the elemental nature of the men of the woods who listened, their imaginations probably quickened by the memory that the blood-stained paper holding the score was now a tongued witness of murder—to the slaying of the man who had lain out there in the moonlight as if asleep on the trail.

It was with a sighing relapse of breath that Red muttered as Tomasso wheeled from the stool, "Danged if that ain't as creepy as the bagpipes!"

Tomasso scowled. "Bagpipes!" he snorted. "Did you ever hear grand opera?"

"Guess I never heerd that feller play," Red admitted; "but you're purty good at it."

"Could you figger up anythin' out of that, Mr. Tommy?" the Constable asked.

"I don't understand," Tomasso said. "Could 'em music things stand for words?"

Tomasso looked puzzled, not knowing of the paper's importance. In his perplexity he turned again to the organ and sang a wordless refrain to the score. Red and Slack caught themselves humming the weird refrain. It was creepy, as Red had declared.

"I'll tell you what it's like," Tomasso said, as he finished, "it's like a storm at sea shrieking through the rigging. It's what we call mad music, a seeking for something, trying to harness the turmoil to music."

"It's kinder like that," Peloo agreed "With some wolves throwed in, howlin' their level best," Slack added.

"Would you mind playin' it again, mister?" Speers requested.

"What're you tryin' to get out of it?" Peloo whispered.

"I'll put the screws on that breed an' see if I can't make him sing that same thing—see, Peloo? But I want to get kinder familiar with the rime of it."

When Tomasso had played the dirge-like thing for the third time, Red said, "That's the kind of music that drives a feller to drink."

"Bein' as you're so pressin', Red, don't mind if I do," Peloo said suggestively.

"It orter be on the house for harborin' the cause of complaint," Red proclaimed; "but Mr. Tomat—the musicianer has been mos' obligin' an' entertainin', an' my proposition goes."

They adjourned to the bar, and there was a round of drinks.

Then Peloo said, "The house now rises to the occasion to remark that it's ready to discharge its obligations. What'll you have, gentlemen?"

The Constable, as cause of the trouble, felt called upon to keep up his end; so that at the expiration of half an hour, Tomasso having gone back to the organ, the four friends were left somewhat in a mellow, confidential mood.

"I don't mind sayin', fellers," Peloo remarked, "that I've heerd that kinder dead march piece before." He looked with wise gravity at Speers and winked.

"That's what I was sorter drivin' at," the Constable observed. "Was it the Frenchman an' the breed?"

"It was," Peloo declared dramatically. "That danged breed would stand there a howlin' by the organ, an' Lamonte he's a thumpin' the ivories an' scrawlin' somethin' on paper. See?"

"Makin' it up," Speers suggested, nodding his head.

"That don't prove nothin'," Slack objected. "They was both nutty. You fellers put me in mind of ol' women that' when they hear a dog howl, they say it's a sign somebody's goin' to die."

"Slack," Meekins put his hand on the last speaker's shoulder, "you go and get the hosses an' we'll pull out for the Big Pine. I know it's stopped rainin,' I feel so danged dry. I ain't goin' to get full to-night, 'cause I'm on the water waggon."

Meekins laughed foolishly as his foot missed the stirrup. "This black mud's so danged slip'ry!" he remarked as an extenuating explanation to Peloo and Speers, who stood in the doorway. At the next try he made it, and, lifting to the saddle, sang out, as the impatient horse lurched forward, "Good-night boys. Hope Slack don't want to go up into the Keewatin Hills to-night."

As the horseman swung to the trail from Silver City, the cupping hoofs beneath them driving up a spray of soppy mud, Slack uttered in staccato gasps, "Guess—it's stopped rainin'—'cause—the supply—had run out."

"Must've come down to beat Noah's big storm," Red added.

A huge moon leered at the riders complacently from over the tree softened outline of Keewatin Hills as their horses ate into the westward trail at a pounding gallop. The two men had lapsed into the silence that comes with sleeping Nature's hush. Where the trail swept the base of Keewatin Hills with the curve of Eugene's scimitar, suddenly appeared, like a cavern door, dark and forbidding, the Devil's Pass.

"That's where Lamonte got him," Red said.

Fifty yards beyond, Slack muttered. "Comes of bookin' up with a breed. He orter knowed better'n to travel with one of that kidney."

Another half-mile, silent but for the rubberlike pound of the hoofs, and with a snort of affright, Red's horse stiffened his forelegs, swerved, and then stood still, throwing his head irritably up and down, the bit clanking against his set teeth.

"Danged if the bridge ain't gone!" Slack declared. "Black Water's chewed it up, that's what it's done!"

Meekins looked with angry reproach at the surgical flood which had swept away the primitive wooden bridge. "Well, I'm dashed," he growled. "How're we goin' to get to the Big Pine now?"

"We can't," Slack answered flatly. "There ain't' a hoss livin' that'd tackle that cranky crick, an' if he did he couldn't get up that straight bank across."

"Well, I'm danged!" Red objurgated.

"There's nothin' for it but to go back to Peloo's," Slack said resignedly.

"An' get the laugh throwed inter us good an' plenty," Meekins contributed. "Peloo'd be in bed, an' everythin' shut up."

"We got to go," Slack persisted.

"I ain't goin' back six miles like a danged fool!" Red declared. "Goin' back there means boozin'. I been off the liquor for three months 'cept to-night, an' I ain't goin' to take a chanst. We'd have to wait two or three days, p'raps, an' I got to be on my claim to-morrer."

"How're you going to get there?" Slack asked sarcastically.

"By ridin' the trail through Keewatin Pass, that's how! 'Taint more'n four miles farder."

Meekins swung his horse as he said this. Slack turned his mount and in silence rode at the other's side. At the mouth of Devil's Pass Slack checked his steed, saying:

"'Taint much use goin' in there. A feller's just as like to hit the wrong trail an' fetch up at Loon Lake."

"Thought you wasn't feared of 'em squaw stories," Red sneered.

"I ain't feared of nothin' no more'n you are," Slack retorted angrily; "but I don't want to go moonin' 'round like a stray goat jus' for the fun of the thing."

"Well, I'm goin' to the Big Pine to-night by this trail!" Red declared. "All I got to do is keep hearin' to the lef' an' come out inter Kettle Valley; then it's as good as a sidewalk to the Big Pine. If you want to go back to Peloo's, Slack, jus' tell 'em that the air up in these hills kinder made your lungs ache an' you didn't care to tackle it. Don't say nothin' about the ghosts, or they'll laugh at you."

"Of all the danged fellers to be sot in their way that I ever see, you've got 'em skinned both ways of the jack, Mr. Meekins! You're wuss'n a kid, an' I'm goin' to play the fool humorin' you. 'Shove along, an' we'll see who's afeerd, an' who's a dang—".

But Meekins had slipped into the gloom of the pass; for the moon had now dipped behind the barrier of Keewatin Hills and the pencilled line of the trail had blurred to nothing.

With heads low hung in the freedom of slacked rein the horses sought the trail with cautious stride. Sometimes a stone clinked a metallic note from the iron shoes; sometimes a quickened rush told of a maskeeg stretch; sometimes a rocky wall brushed leg or arm as the path they rode looped some sharp point; but always they drove into a deeper gloom which lay in heaviness upon their hearts. Strange broken fragments of the organ's wail came hauntingly to Meekins in the sombre stillness of the gorge. Once Slack's horse misplaced a hoof and floundered on the giving edge of a cut bank, and, startled, he cried out in sudden fear; then he coughed and swore to reassert his nerve.

The uplift of the horses' backs told that they climbed a heavy grade. A wind blew in their faces now; it chilled as though beyond lay snow.

"We're gettin' there," Red called back to Slack. "I'm getting' ol' Keewatin's breath."

"I wisht he was getting' a punch in the face!" Slack muttered to himself. "I'd like to give him one."

Soft wailing strains came from the pine boughs overhead as the wind cut through their wirelike screen. Afraid, Slack rode with nerves as vibrant as though he dangled over a precipice. He almost screamed in agony when something, perhaps a startled wolf, fled in noisy haste across their path. The horses snorted. They, too, seemed on the edge of fear.

"I was a fool to come inter these danged hills!" Slack muttered.

Red spoke to his horse some needless word, as though he sought a change to the silent strain.

Gradually, imperceptibly, the wind grew stronger as they rode the hill. The music of the pines was now one lengthened hum, as though bees hung on every limb. "We're on top, Slack," Red advised, as their horses flattened to level going. "This gully is on the divide; then we dip down into the valley."

"This cut ain't more'n ten feet wide that's why," Red explained, "an' the sides is about three hundred feet up. Guess this is where the gold is — or p'raps the ghosts."

Slack shivered, and exclaimed, for the horses had checked after the stiff climb, "Push on, ol' man. I'm about sick of this dungeon!"

Their way lay over stones which mused their mounts to flounder as they rode. They left behind the heavier gloom of the lower hills, and some reflected moonlight crept through the gorge.

A hundred yards beyond the narrow cleft was ended by an amphitheatre; it was like a colosseum. On its edge Red checked his horse to say:

"There's two or three openin's leads

"The wind's died out all of a sudden."

His voice was cut by a demoniac scream which died away in a low wailing note of anguish. Slack felt his scalp twitch. A cold chill crept up his back, and on his forehead beads of perspiration clung cold and clammy. The horses stood in trembling fright.

"What's that, Red? My God! What—"

The wailing note which had sunk to nothing came again, faint, growing in strength, until at the pitch of a scream it was smothered by a roaring medley, as though huge fiends fought in the arena of the encircling walls.

Slack's horse, terror sticken, or perhaps the man, drunk with fear, drove with unconscious hand, galloped off to the left and through the first opening in the rock barrier.

Red's horse plunged and fought against the pull of his rider's hands. Fighting they struggled across the amphitheatre with its wailing cries. Through another cleft in the rocks the horse sought for escape. Struggling, trying to check the frightened beast, Red was smashed against a jutting rock which caught a leg and swept him from the saddle, where he lay stunned by the fall.

He lay there for a long time crumpled up among the boulders. The gray light of dawn crept in through the creviced rock and when he opened his eyes wearily it was day.

Half stupid, the wailing voices of the rocks threw him back all the hours since he had left the house of Peloo. "Say, Peloo," he muttered drowsily, "I'm sick of that tune! Tell Tomato to stop playin' the melojun."

Returning consciousness told him all the hard, bitter facts, brushed away the cobwebs from his unnerved brain. He looked out on the cold gray rocks, and then the memory of his horse, the ride up the hill, the fight for lost control, the crashing fall, came back in jostling sequence. And all the time the heavy roar, the wailing, vibrant tone, alternated with sudden times of quiet.

Red tried to rise. With a cry of pain he fell back. One leg lay useless, wrenched somewhere. As he lay helpless his mind took up the vidid things of the night, pondering all the many whys and hows. It was a time to think, a good chance for a slow working mind to solve problems.

After a long time he chuckled; then he swore softly. "I jus' got to lay here till Slack hikes back to find out why I ain't comin'," he said to an unobtrusive rock that nestled at his shoulder; "but I got these sounds kinder sorted out. Guess I been dumped right in the Injuns' ghost factory."

"It's the wind," he soliloquized. "This danged hole's built like an organ—wuss'n Peloo's." Even as he spoke the wind, which blew in fitful gusts, split by the trident rock, cried out in pain, its echoes booming from the other wall. "Yes, em's the ghosts" he said conclusively. "It's dang like that thing Tomato played ,too!"

His own words suggested to Meekins a startling new line of thought. At first it was too subtle and tentative for expression. Silently he worked it out, and slowly.

"I've got it!" he muttered after a time. "That lost gold mine is here somewheres. That greasy breed found it, got scored out, an' was killin' Lamonte how to find it by these wind noises. Lamonte writ it down to kinder remember it, so he'd know when he come to the spot. (Wisht Slack'd come. My leg's painin' like—). Then that fool breed gets crazy, an' is sorry for givin' up the secret, or was sorry he gave away about the gold, or somethin', pumps a bullet inter Lamonte, an' steals the paper back. That's what!"

At the end of an hour the unearthly music had ceased; the craterlike opening in the rocks was as quiet and restful as a cavern should be.

Red explained this phenomenon to his friend the boulder. "The wind died out or shifted, I guess."

As Meekins idly scanned the rocky wall at his back he suddenly gave a cry of startled joy. A two foot vein of white quartz showed little splashes of bright yellow where the peeping sun threw a shaft of light on its face. He squirmed over on his side, drew a knife from his pocket and picked at one of these.

"By hookey, it's gold!" he said in an awed voice. "I've found the Lost Mine, sure as shootin'!"

Then he lay gazing in quiet content at the vein of richness. For another hour he lay waiting for the advent of the relief, his patience due entirely to his inability to perform otherwise. Then the ring of ironed hoofs on the stony path raised a medley of echoes from the resonant walls. Slack's voice boomed in giant tones. Some other man that rode with him laughed and myriad fiends cackled in this freakish place of noise.

"Wisht I had a foghorn to try this out," Red joked at himself, his spirits lightened by the coming relief.

With that he bellowed like a bull, and wild beasts seemed to fill the arena with their rage. Red saw the riders check their horses in dismay and peer about the place in sudden fear.

"Guess I'd best not get too gay," he muttered. "Slack'll bolt." He hardly raised his voice above a whisper as he called. "Here I am, Slack. Yours truly, Red Meekins."

"Hope you had your breakfast, Bill," Red observed ironically.

"I come soon's I saw you wasn't turnin' up," Slack offered in extenuation of his delay. "Are you hurted?"

"My left leg's on strike, an' won't walk none," Meekins answered. "Glad you knowed enough to bring that spare hoss."

"I rounded up Dave here to come along an' help look for you," Slack contributed in the way of further extenuation. "We'll lift you to the saddle now. Can you sit a hoss with your sore leg?"

"Soon's I've finished a little business I come here for to transact," Red answered quaintly. He winked at Dave as he asked, "Slack, you're workin' for me by the day ain't you?"

"I allow I am."

"But on this extra occasion that don't go," Meekins said. He pointed a finger at the rocky wall across the narrow cleft and added, "Jus' take that vein of quartz carryin' free millin' gold in the name of Meekins, Slack & Co. Then we'll get back to camp. I'm kinder hungry. Guess we'll call her the Ghost Mine."

Dead Men Drawing Pay.

New York, April 8.—Dead men are still on the pay rolls, so Commissioner Fosdyck of the department of accounts, reported to the mayor yesterday.

In one instance, he said, the man who is filling a dead man's shoes is also drawing pay in his own name.

The commissioner believes the two instances he has uncovered are part of an extensive system and he accuses a Tammany district leader of engineering one of the frauds.

Evidence has been placed in the hands of the district attorney.

He had started with his team some time afterwards came back without him. His people started back to see what had happened and found his dead body.

Restaurant Fails for Queer Reason.

New York, April 8.—Too much time between the order and the dinner, the result of too much distance between dining-room, brought about an assignment of the Cafe de l'Opera, yesterday, one of the show places on Broadway, with liabilities of $100,000. The restaurant was open last fall at a cost of $1,100,000, with a chef at $50,000 a year, and a manager at $20,000.

U. S. Naval Appropriation.

Washington, D.C., April 9.—By a decisive vote of 163 to 110, fourteen present and not voting, the House late yesterday authorized the construction of two battleships to cost $6,000,000 each.

This action was taken just previous to the vote of the naval bill carrying $128,037,603, three millions less than the naval bill requested.

Kitchener Not Coming.

GALT THEATRE GUTTED.

Opera House Block Suffers $25,000 by Fire.

Galt, April 9.—Galt yesterday suffered from a $25,000 fire in the Opera House block, off Queen's square. It gutted the upper storey, completely destroying the playhouse, stage scenery and property.

The fire was supposedly caused by an electric light wire in the stage end, and was prevented from reaching a row of six stores on the ground floor, but these were badly damaged by water. Five firemen had a narrow escape when part of the floor fell in.

Losses: Opera House block, owned by Jas. Scott, value $30,000, insurance $10,000; tenants, Lockhardt & Co., plumbers, loss $1,500, insured; A. G. Bruce, paints and wall paper, loss $1,000, insured; H. Horton, butcher, loss $300, no insurance; F. A. McDonald, grocer, loss $1,000, insured; W. H. Hunter, sporting goods, loss $600; no insurance; J. Helm, upholsterer, loss $1,000, no insurance.

There was a play on Thursday night, but moving pictures have been the great feature of the house for a year, and it is not believed the opera house will be restored. The building blocks East Main street and public feeling favors the acquirement of the property for removal and the extension of the street.

News yesterday from Herbert Panabaker, late of Hespeler, who moved to the west last fall, said that all his stock and implements at Riding Mountain, Man., were destroyed by fire, with no insurance.

Smallpox at Cobalt.

Cobalt, Ont., April 9.—There are now six smallpox patients confined in the Isolation Hospital. Three of those cases have developed within the last couple of days. The others came to the hospital during the previous ten days. All the patients have been living in camp some time and just how they became infected is not known.

The Board of Health are starting the installation of a bucket system and have let the contract to a Toronto firm for a crematory. The work on the new sewerage and waterworks systems is being rushed to completion, though it will probably be at least three months before the system will be ready. In the meantime the scavenging system has been enlarged and improved.

Prisoners Are Stripped.

Richmond, Va., April 9.—Fred Cunningham, alias Eddie Fay, and Frank Chester, alias Little Dick Harris, arrested in New York, charged with having rifled the cashier's safe of the Richmond postoffice, were safely lodged in jail here at 9 a.m.

They were stripped and bathed and placed naked in their cells. "They won't try any silk thread and emery dust work on my bars," said the jailer.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

It is believed that a boy who killed a companion in a prize-fight in Passaic, N.J., has fled to Canada.

The enemies of the Payne tariff law at Washington are working to secure the appointment of a tariff commission.

Earl Crewe, presiding at a meeting of the Atlantic Union, indulged in some gentle banter concerning the Englishmen's stiffness of demeanor in the presence of strangers, whether British or foreign.

Montreal Harbor Improvements.

Montreal, April 9.—The harbor commissioners have disclosed their elaborate plans for further improvement of Montreal Harbor, which will involve $18,000,000, in addition to expenditure of $6,000,000, which is provided for already and is now being apportioned.

It is planned to dam the river between the end of the present guard pier and St. Helen's Island, and to bridge the south channel, making new bridge across the river for railways and other traffic.

A novel feature to do away with ice trouble in the spring is to build a series of forty islands in Laprairie Bay in horseshoe shape. Provision is also made for the outlet into the river harbor of the proposed Georgian Bay Canal.

All these improvements will take some years to complete.

In Loathsome Trade.

New Haven, Conn., April 9.—In asking Judge George Wheeler in the Superior Court here yesterday to impose the maximum penalty upon Charles Ross and his wife for keeping a disorderly house, State Attorney Alling said that Ross and his wife were the leaders in the white slave traffic in this city and "that high city officials, members of the police department, bankers, and even churchmen are implicated in the white slave traffic which has been going on here for a long time, and the methods used to outwit the authorities are ahead of anything in New York."

Ross and wife were given the maximum penalty of five years in prison.

Record Price For a Painting.

New York, April 9.—A new record price in this country for a painting sold at public auction, was established at the sale of the late Charles Yerkes' collection, when $137,000 was paid for Frans Hals' "Portrait of a Woman." In all 59 pictures were sold, fetching $509,250, making the total to date, $1,526,250. This is also a new record.

SAUL GOUIN IS DECLARED BY THE JURY NOT GUILTY OF THE MURDER OF MARY SMITH

Jury Brings in Verdict at 1.15 o'clock---Mr. Blackstock's Address to the Jury Was Dramatic and Terrible in its Force of Accusation, While the Judge's Charge Was Damning---Jury Out Nearly Two Hours.

HE WILL BE HELD ON CHARGE OF WOUNDING

Special to The Examiner.

North Bay, April 9.—(Later).—Mr. Blackstock's address to the jury in the Gouin case was dramatic and terrible in its force of accusation and marshalling of evidence, while the judge's charge was damning to the last degree. Jury retired at 11.25 and returned at 1.15 with a verdict of "Not Guilty." Prosecution announce that Gouin will be held on two charges of wounding.

North Bay, April 8.—The evidence in the Saul Gouin murder case was all in at 6 o'clock, and addresses to the jury began at 8 o'clock. There are two other indictments against Gouin for wounding with intent, which may be taken should the murder charge fail. The evidence for the prosecution this afternoon developed nothing new, and the defence placed the prisoner in the box. His story was that the women threatened him ,and crazed with fear, he seized an axe, remembering nothing more after the first blow. Mr. Blackstock's cross-examination of the prisoner was severe, but failed to elicit any admissions conflicting with his story of self-defence. A great deal of medical evidence was introduced and the defence endeavoured to establish that Mary Smith came to her death from tuberculosis, making out a fairly good case along this line, although the medical witnesses contended that the direct cause of death was blood-poisoning, beginning in the jaw fractured by the axe. Tuberculosis was present in the body at the post-mortem.

Mr. McGarry addressed the jury at length, laying stress on the doubt as to the direct cause of the woman's death, nine months after receiving injuries at Gouin's hands.

The case was continued this morning with the evidence of the Crawford woman, whose story of the affray was highly coloured by an apparent studied attempt at sleclamation, which weakened her evidence materially, although affording the spectators much entertainment. Many objections are being entered by Mr. T. W. McGarry, K.C., against the evidence and the manner of bringing it out by Mr. George Tate Blackstock. Ethel Crawford told the court of the prisoner's visit to their shack and the attack on Mary Smith and the witness with an axe. She suggested the motive of robbery. She told of the terrible chase along the trail through the woods towards the nearest habitation, the women in their night clothes and bare feet, with Gouin in full pursuit; of reaching a house, where both women, although covered with blood from many wounds, were turned away by a woman occupant because she could not stand the sight of blood. She told of meeting a man named Bucharme, who took them to his house farther on and had their wounds attended to. Mary Smith went to the hospital, where she stayed for three months with fearful wounds, her head bein galmost severed from her body.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGarry the witness admitted using drugs, but denied taking a morphine injection from Dr. Bruce Smith in the court roo m this morning. She admitted leading a life of prostitutoin and that she had been stabbed by a man in Cobalt in a family row. The prisoner's counsel extracted an admission from witness that she had been taking morphine on the day of the shack fracas.

The medical examination of Ross resulted in the statement that in the opinion of the doctors he was not insane, but morally irresponsible.

THE MADRIGAL CLUB

The Toronto News says: The Conservatory Madrigal Club of Peterborough, Mr. Rupert Gliddon director, sang very sweetly and effectively. "By Babylon's Wave," (Gounod); and gave a forceful but interesting presentation of Dudley Buck's "Hymn to Music" and McFarren's madrigal, "You Stole My Love." The club has evidently been painstakingly trained by Mr. Gliddon in the path of high musical ideals and the results were given close attention and a good deal of applause by the audience last evening.

A SAVING TO THE CITY OF $350 PER YEAR

New Arrangement Will be Entered Into With the Bell Telephone Co. by Which Company Will Supply Current for Operation of Alarm System.

CHIEF HOWARD'S EFFORTS

As the result of the trip of Fire Chief Howard and Ald. Buller to the International Fire Chiefs' Association last year and a subsequent journey to Montreal by Chief Howard, the city has been given an opportunity to save $350 per year in the matter of power for operating the fire alarm system.

Under the present system of operation it costs the city about $500 a year. Through Chief Howard's efforts, however, the city has an offer from the Bell Telephone Company to supply the necessary current for $150 per year.

The matter was brought up at the meeting of the Fire, Water and Light Committee of the City Council last night, when letters were read from the Bell Telephone Company, making the formal offer to the city.

Chief Howard explained that when he and Ald. Buller had visited the convention last year they had been struck with the advisability of the storage battery system of operation, but on inquiring into the matter, had found that a change to that system on the part of the city would cost in the neighbourhood of $900. Since then, however, Chief Howard had come to the conclusion that the Bell Telephone Company might be in a position to supply the current from their local exchange. Accordingly, he had asked for permission for a day off, and had gone down to Montreal to look into the matter with the result that the Company finally made the proposition of supplying the necessary current to the city for $150 per year. The Chief officially recommended the adoption of the offer, as the change would not cost the city anything, and would represent a saving of $350 per year.

THE FAMOUS DOG BY-LAW MAY NOT BE ENFORCED

Legal Committee of the City Council Came Near Rescinding the "Lease Clause" Last Night, when the Measure Was Discussed---"Not Going to Lead My Dogs on a String" Said Ald. Morgan.

LIKELY WILL NOT BE ANY ACTION TAKEN

All this fuss that has been kicked up during the past few days over the dog by-law now appears to have been somewhat premature, judging by the action of the Legal Committee last night, when it was practically decided to allow the by-law to stand, but to make no effort to enforce it, at least the clause compelling dogs to be kept on leash when in public places.

Ald. Phelan introduced the matter last night.

"What about this dog by-law," he asked. "If there is any doubt as to its legality don't you think we had better rescind it?"

"The papers have been giving us some hot shots," commented Chairman Duffus.

"Several people have remarked to me," said Ald. Graham, "that the Council couldn't compel a man to pay taxes and tie up his dog; one man said that he would fight it out."

"I don't think the by-law is any use the way it is now," said Ald. Phelan. "That is my candid opinion. I'll move that we take no action."

"We have to take action," came from Mayor Morrow.

"Let us test it anyway," advised Ald. Turner; "if it is no good we can drop it then."

"Well, I don't propose to lead my dogs over town on a string," rejoined Ald. Morgan.

Ald. Phelan expressed the opinion that the clause requiring dogs to be on a leash was of no use and ought to be taken out. He was of the opinion that if the law requiring every dog to have a tag was carefully carried out there would be little trouble. He accordingly moved that the "leash" clause be rescinded.

"Let it stand as it is, but don't enforce it," remarked the Mayor, and the matter was dropped at that point.

From all of which it does not appear as if the dog owners need worry very much about the by-law.

DOG HOLDS TO BURGLAR'S LEG ALL THROUGH NIGHT

Special to The Examiner.

Omaha, Neb., April 28.—As a successful burglar catcher an ordinary bulldog hasoutclassed the local police. This dog is one of the appurtenances of the Peyton drug store. A couple of nights ago a burglar forced an entrance into the store by opening a skylight and through the opening dropping to the floor, where he was met by the bulldog, who sank his fangs into one of the legs of the man.

Having plenty of nerve the man refused to make an outcry, but instead beat the dog over the head. The animal held tighter, and at 7 o'clock the following morning, when the clerk opened the store, he found the man lying on the floor in a dead faint, while beside him, with its teeth still fastened in the leg, lay the dog.

The man was sent away to jail and the dog partook of a breakfast, apparently unconcerned over what it had accomplished.

WORKING BOYS WON THE LAST OF THE SERIES

The last of the series of three games between the working boys and the school boys came off last night in the 'Y' gymn. It was felt from the first the school boys would have very little chance, as two of their best men, Wallis and Matthews were off. But when the boys got started it was seen there was not going to be a run away. Both sides played very good ball, although some of the boys tended to mix it up at times. The star for the school boys was without doubt Laing, while for the working boys Flowers showed up.

The score at half time was 9 for the school boys and 15 for the working boys. Final score 33 to 25 in favour of the working boys.

The teams lined up as follows:

School boys, Laing, Lees, Bartlett, Hill Pearson.

Working boys — Flowers Nicholls Hanwell Hastie, Outram.

Buggy Was Struck By The C. P. R. 4.48 Express

Two young men had a narrow escape from being seriously injured yesterday afternoon, when the buggy in which they were driving was struck by the C. P. R. west bound express, which leaves the local station at 4.48. They were driving on Aylmer street, and, when approaching the crossing, apparently did not see the on-coming train, and attempted to cross in front. Fortunately the engine was only moving slowly and little damage was done by the collision. The occupants of the rig were thrown out, but escaped with a few bruises, the chief damage being done to the vehicle, the top of which was smashed. The horse ran away, but was captured a short time afterwards. The result might quite easily have been serious.

POST CARD COLUMN.

THE ENGLISHMAN IN THE WEST.

Sir.—I do not agree with the construction you put upon the no Englishman or loafers advertisement. Clearly, therefore, Englishmen are not loafers. Perhaps Drawer C wants to run a bucket shop, wild-cat, or swindling cement scheme. But seriously, the Englishmen (we call ourselves Britons) out here, are a miserable lot of blackguards. What can you expect? I was myself no good in the old country, or should not have come to Canada.

Yours, etc.,
W. A. BAILEY.

P.S.—I wonder whether the writer has tackled the dog being offensive to ladies has done anything against the white slave traffic, and other terrible inhuman criminals.

Temperance, in its true sense, does not, and should not, prohibit the sensible use by adults of a beverage so rich in health help as Regal Lager. This pure, delicious, mild beer greatly aids digestion.

WORK ON SECTIONS FOUR AND SIX OF THE TRENT CANAL WATERWAY IS SOON TO COMMENCE

The two remaining sections of the Ontario-Rice Lake Trent Canal Division are, in the course of a short while, to be commenced. Tenders for the construction of these are advertized for in another column. When these are completed, it means that the entire Trent Canal waterway, from Lake Simcoe to Trenton, a distance of 168 miles, will be open, and navigation between Lake Simcoe and Montreal will be possible. A great deal of work is to be done, and both are large contracts. The sections are numbers four and six. Number four section covers a distance of eighteen miles, from Campbellford to Chisholm's Rapids, and number six is Healey's Falls, and comprises about two miles.

Healey Falls Section.

Healey Falls section is the intermediate ground between Randolph McDonald Co's. contract and that of Brown and Aylmer. Healey Falls has a drop of seventy feet, and it will be necessary to build three locks and a very large dam. The locks will consist of a single and a double-flight one.

On the No. 4 section from Campbellford to Chisholm's Rapids, there will be three single locks and one double flight one. There will also be three dams built on this part. The river here will require a large amount of dredging.

WANTS THE GROCERS TO KEEP GOODS OFF STREET

A letter was handed in at the office to-day which, on account of the action taken by the Council in regard to the by-law, has been withheld from publication. One feature of the letter, however, calls for publication, if not for comment. "If the Council want to turn their attention to a matter of real usefulness, they can find it in compelling the grocers throughout the city to keep their goods off the sidewalks. People when they buy groceries want to get them clean, and as free from tuberculous and anthrax germs as possible. With all the dirt from the sidewalks and the street blowing continually over fruit or vegetables, not to speak of other possibilities of filth acquirement, it is a wonder that people can care to take chances in purchasing from the open baskets at grocery stores for their home needs." The writer concludes: "If there is a by-law relating to such matter it seems about time to see now that the warm weather is coming, that it is rigidly enforced."

Attractive And Splendidly Equipped Quarters Of The Band On Simcoe St.

A reporter paid a visit to the new and sumptuous quarters of the band and was particularly impressed with the attractiveness of the rooms. They are situated on the third floor of the city building. Painters and decorators have been busily engaged renovating the rooms and a complete change has been effected. On entering the rooms one is immediately struck with the brightness and club-like appearance of them. There are five rooms in the suite. The rehearsal hall is a very spacious one, and most convenient. It contains forty-five lockers, in a cherry finish, and accommodation for each member's uniform and instrument. The walls are attractively decorated with pictures of the king and queen, and several famous battle scenes. In this room there are also two quarter-cut oak reading tables, with a dozen of the leading illustrated papers and all the best magazines. The furniture is new and up-to-date. The room is finished in a green pattern tapestry paper with border, and the woodwork is in dark green and white.

The library is beautifully finished in light brown paper and white and green woodwork. There is a splendid cabinet divided into compartments, all classified and in which the band's $2,500 music library is stored. There are only three bands in the Dominion in possession of a library superior to this one. The uniform room is finished in green and white and containing hardwood wardrobes for the the storing of uniforms not in use. The billiard room is very attractive. Its decorations are the same as the rehearsal hall. It contains a first-class billiard table, easy chairs, appropriate pictures, and the floor is laid with a Scotch inlaid linoleum with dark red border. The lavatory and bathroom is completed with modern fixtures.

Cat Bit Four People Before Being Shot

Special to The Examiner.

New York, April 8.—Shut in a room with a cat that hadsuddenly gone mad and had bitten her two children, Mrs. Anna Champer of No. 504 West Forty-eighth street yesterday bravely battled with the animal, though severely bitten herself, and drove the animal into a closet, where it was kept locked up until a policeman killed it with a revolver shot.

The cat had been a pet of the Champers for three years, and never had been known to show bad temper. But yesterday, when Gilbert Champer, twelve years old, began to play with it, the cat turned on him and bit him twice on one hand. Hearing her son's cries Mrs. Champer ran to his aid and drove the animal away from him. But it jumped at Harold, ten years old and sank its teeth twice into his legs.

Although the animal was snarling and rushing madly about the room, Mrs. Champer again attacked it and, despite the wounds it inflicted in her ankle, drove it into the closet. Next she found Patrolman F. Hembdt of the West Forty-seventh street police station and brought him in. Hembdt opened the closet door. The cat sprang at him. Seizing it by the neck as it scratched and bit his hands, Hembdt drew his revolver and killed the animal with two bullets.

Dr. Ayres of Roosevelt Hospital cauterized the wounds of the four persons injured. The cat's body was sent to the Pasteur Institute to determine whether it had rabies. Hembdt reported on the sick list last night. He lives at No. 300 West One Hundred and Thirty-third street.

A GOOD ARRANGEMENT.

The Water Commissioners and the City Council are to be congratulated upon their public spirit and civic patriotism in bringing about the power arrangement with the Canadian General Electric Company; and the city is to be congratulated upon the fact that a great industry that has been such an important factor in our growth and prosperity, has thereby been placed in a position to undertake great expansion in this city. The $250,000, the initial expenditure on extensions, involved in the arrangement, is only the beginning. The Company, now being assured of a supply of the cheapest power or among the cheapest power in the province, will no doubt proceed as rapidly as possible, to carry out the plans for the Peterborough extension, which will, before completed, involve an aggregate expenditure of 600,000 or $700,000. Now, and for some time past, they have had to turn away orders, and in self-defence they will have to provide increased manufacturing facilities. So that, in effect, their arrangement concluded by the Commissioners and the Council with the Canadian General is equivalent to the addition of a large new industry that will employ 500 or 600 hands, and expend in buildings, etc., 500,000 or 600,000 dollars. We now have the Canadian General here as a fixture. Now that this is assured and the danger over, there is no harm in saying that there was a very unpleasant possibility of the additions and extensions—so to speak, being made in Toronto, and if begun there they would be continued there.

THE DOG BY-LAW.

The dog by-law recently enacted by the city council may seem a drastic measure, and, of course, like all sudden and sharp departures from custom, the conditions created by it will give rise to a great deal of inconvenience. But to be judicially fair one must admit that the public have suffered inconvenience, not to speak of danger incurred, by the unrestricted ravages of dogs allowed to roam at will. As, in the case of some hotel keepers, the failure to observe the license law, has largely been responsible for the demand for the adoption of local option, so, in the case of many owners of dogs, the failure to control them, to even shut them up at nights, their permitting them to chase and bark at every horse that passes their lairs; ther ravages committed upon open lawns and flower borders; their smeary mud-tracks on housewives' newly cleaned verandahs—all these things and many others that go to make up the nuisance of uncontrolled dogs are what create the demand for dog regulation. While dog owners are inconvenienced by the new edict, the city council seemed to take the view that the public were inconvenienced too, by a multitude of vagrant dogs, left without control and allowed to make themselves nuisances. A small proportion of the dogs in Peterborough are valuable, and they, as a rule, are looked after because they are worth looking after, and are not allowed to become a public nuisance. It is chiefly the worthless curs, many of which do not pay taxes, that do the damage. The very name, cur—from the Latin curro, run, or roam, is fixed on on a certain kind of dog—because, half-starved, they wander about in search of food, invading private premises and making themselves exasperating nuisances. As decent hotel keepers are discredited by the actions of unworthy and law-breaking ones, so are good dogs and dog owners penalized by the depredations of worthless mongrels, which have neither breed, breeding, nor good behaviour. A good dog is a treasure; a bad dog is a humbug, and it is the latter, largely, that has provoked the drastic regulations against the dog in Toronto, Lindsay, and other places, as well as Peterborough. Whether or not there is much foundation for the mad-dog scare, it is certain that a dog kept confined, or on the chain, brings little or no danger to the public. Indignant dog owners are writing protests to the newspapers, but they and those who have suffered from unruly and unrestrained dogs, may both be premature. The effectiveness of the by-law depends upon its enforcement, and the general experience is that municipal by-laws are, as a rule, more generally broken than enforced.

ANTI-GAMBLING BILL BEATEN?

The human love for the horse, especially in the highest development of his speed qualities upon the turf was never more strongly brought out, than in the eventful story of Mr. H. H. Miller's bill, broadly aimed at the prohibition of race-track gambling, and professional betting. Throughout the whole of the debates on the subject and in the evidence brought out so voluminously in the committee, there was an almost universal acknowledgment of the evils of professional betting on the race track, and of its external adjuncts, yet the sporting instinct, the love of a race, the excitement of the sport so strongly predominated over moral and economic consideration that in the closing stages on Thursday night, in a house of 155 members, the division was so close on one incidental motion, as to be 78 to 77 on a divisional committee.

No measure was, perhaps, ever brought under legislative process, under circumstances that elicited more information favourable and adverse, bearing upon the subject than the Miller Bill. It was introduced into the House on November 16th. It received its second reading, after an animated debate, on December 2nd, and was referred to a special committee consisting of Messrs. Miller, McCbll, Monk, Blain, Sinclair, Stratton and Martin. The committee met on January 18th, and the taking of evidence began, and was continued at intervals up to March 10th. During that time a veritable cloud of witnesses was examined, and no fewer than six eminent counsel appeared on behalf of the respective interests concerned, one for the promoters of the bill and five for the several racing and horse-breeding interests. A great mass of evidence was adduced concerning, not only every possible phase of the subject, but also six hundred octavo pages of printed matter, containing the evidence, moral and documentary in full detail. Some idea of the thoroughness of the examination is afforded by the fact that the cost of bringing witnesses alone was $2,500. The interest in and about the House was maintained in undiminished force and increased intensity towards the hour, when the bill, being reported to the House, its fate was to be decided. There was an exceedingly strong "lobby" both for and against the bill. The discussion which the Government promised to allow began on Wednesday afternoon, and continued, without interruption, till Thursday night, when one of the most exciting nights of the session set in. There was abundance of oratory on both sides of the question. Mr. McColl moved an amendment, which was practically a substitute bill, entirely emasculating the original bill, so far as the provisions effecting the moral objects of it were concerned. The House was in committee when the first vote on the first clause was reached. It was a strange sight to see members in bunches on the Government and Opposition sides voting the same way, for or against. Both sides were, from appearance, pretty evenly divided, as the count showed the House was—in the ratio of 78 to 77. But this proposition was not permanent; in two succeeding votes the ratio changed—87 to 74, and 85 to 73. Mr. Miller made a gallant stand for the principle of his bill, and moved that the committee rise, for the reason, as he explained, that the proposed amendment would make conditions on the race track worse than they were now, and he preferred seeing his bill killed, as his motion meant. Mr. Fielding and Sir Wilfrid Laurier solved the situation and moved that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again. This would make a compromise possible, and if this were done by the opposing parties, Sir Wilfrid suggested that it might be possible to resume the consideration of the bill this session.

Though, for the moment, the interests opposed to the abolition of the admitted evils of race track gambling are in the ascendant, the cause of this great moral reform aimed at by the suspended bill is not lost. The whole course of events in connection with Mr. Miller's bill, has shown that public sympathy is overwhelmingly with the reform proposed. The members of parliament do not seem to realize this fact; but in the interval between now and another session, personal contact with their constituents will enlighten them, and the force of public opinion will bring legislators to see the speciousness of the argument, that horse breeding depends on racing and racing shines only on betting, and that the sentiment of our best people will not tolerate the policy of doing evil that good may come.

EAT AND GET THIN

This is turning an old phrase face about, but modern methods of reducing fat have made this revision possible.

If you are overfat and also averse to physical exertion and likewise fond of the table and still want to reduce your excess flesh several pounds, do this: Go to your druggist (or write the Marmola Co., 833 Farmer Bldg., Detroit, Mich.) and give him (or send them) 75 cents. For this modest amount of money the druggist will put you in the way of satisfying your ambition for a nice, trim, slim figure. He will hand you a large case of Marmola Prescription Tablets (compounded in accordance with the famous Marmola Prescription), one of which you must take after each meal and at bedtime until you begin to lose your fat at the rate of 12 to 16 ounces a day. That is all. Just go on eating what you like, leave exercising to the athletes, but take your little tablet faithfully and without a doubt that flabby flesh will quickly take unto itself wings, leaving behind it your natural self, neatly clothed in firm flesh and trim muscles.

A BIG SAVING TO CITY

at once impressed with the idea and on motion of Ald. Buller and Batten it was decided to have the City Solicitor prepare an agreement to be signed by the Company.

The first recommendation was that tenders for the firemen's uniforms be advertised for at once, the clothing to be supplied by Sept. 1. The suggestion was merely to avoid delay in the matter and was adopted on motion of Ald. Buller and Ald. Metheral.

Chief Howard also asked that the three local papers, one Toronto paper, "The Fire and Water Engineering," "The Scientific American" and one or two monthly magazines be subscribed for for the use of the fire department.

This recommendation did not meet with the approval of Ald. Buller. "Let the men buy their papers the same as everybody else does," he remarked, "I don't see why we should furnish them."

It was finally decided upon, on motion of Ald. Batten and Metheral, that the "Fire and Water Engineering" be subscribed for.

On motion of Ald. Buller, seconded by the Mayor, the Chairman and Ald. Graham and Metheral were appointed a committee to look into the matter of a new box stall for the fire hall and to act if they saw fit.

There were present Ald. Morgan, chairman, Ald. Metheral, Graham, Buller, Batten and the Mayor.

DANGEROUS DANDRUFF

Will Make Canada a Baldheaded Nation If Not Checked.

M. Pasteur, the great French Physician of Paris, once said: "I believe we shall one day rid the world of all diseases caused by germs."

Dandruff is caused by germs, a fact accepted by all physicians.

Dandruff is the root of all hair evils. If it were not for the little destructive germs working with a persistency worthy of a better cause, there would be no baldness.

Parisian Sage will kill the dandruff germs and remove dandruff in two weeks or money back.

Wm. Madill guarantees it. It will stop itching scalp,, falling hair and make the hair grow thick and abundant.

It puts life and lustre into the hair and prevents it from turning gray.

It is the hair dressing par excellence, daintily perfumed and free from grease stickiness. It is the favourite with women of taste and culture, who know the social value of fascinating hair. A large bottle costs only 50 cents at leading druggists everywhere and in Peterborough by Wm. Madill. The girl with the auburn hair is on every package.

He was a member of the Belmont Club, and his fellow club members, in saying farewell to him last night, took advantage of the opportunity of presenting him with a silver napkin ring, inscribed with the club's monogram. The presentation was made by Mr. Melville Jamieson, while Mr. Jas. T. C. Lang, in a neat speech ,expressed the regret of the members that the pleasant relations, which had existed, would have to be severed.

FERRY BETWEEN LONDON AND PARIS AT LAST SEEMS PROBABLE

CROSS CHANNEL FERRY POSSIBLE

American Tourists in Europe Rejoice to Know Matter Is Seriously Considered.

BRITONS ARE BLAMED

English Conservatism Has Prevented Travel from London to Paris Without Annoying Change of Cars.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH.]
LONDON, Saturday.

CROWDS of American tourists who come to Europe every year will be interested to know that there is at last some prospect of the long talked of cross Channel ferry, which will enable them to get into their carriages in London and not leave their seats or sleeping berths until they have to get out again in Paris, becoming an accomplished fact. And why not? it is argued. It is done elsewhere. Germany is ahead of England and France in that respect. The traveller who is bound for Copenhagen enters into the comfortable sleeping car at the Stettiner Bahnhof in Berlin at eleven o'clock at night, gives what is the equivalent in American money of twenty-five cents to the trim "controleur" to look after his baggage at the Danish customs, and goes to bed to awake to his morning coffee within half an hour or so of the Danish capital, all oblivious of the fact that he has crossed in his slumbers twenty-six miles of the storm tossed Baltic.

However the passengers may have felt, or slept, at Warnemunde, on the German shore, the Copenhagen express has been shunted bodily onto the great train ferry and smoothly and swiftly borne across to Gjedsen, on the Danish coast.

CONTINENTAL CONTRAST.

Berlin to Copenhagen is an eleven hour trip. London to Paris takes six and a half hours, yet the Paris bound traveller from London, be he touring multi-millionaire or a commercial traveller, has to turn out in the middle of the night, walk shivering and baggage laden to the steamer, and, if he can not obtain a cabin, rest uncomfortably in the saloon or on deck until he walks once more, shivering and bag laden, across the gangway onto French soil. The distance from Germany to Denmark, from shore to shore of the Baltic and across the Straits of Dover, is about the same, but the difference in the comfort of the two journeys would have elicited picturesque animadversion even from Mark Tapley. The reason is the same that has hitherto deprived London of a pneumatic postal service, and that which is at the bottom of modern life in England—English conservatism.

And now the Associated Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom have taken the matter up in earnest, and at their annual conference held in London this week that was one of the subjects discussed with serious earnestness. An act was passed by Parliament in 1906 to secure unbroken carriage of passengers, mails and merchandise across the Channel, and it was the Paris (British) chamber which brought up the subject in a motion asking the conference to bring pressure to bear upon the British government to make the act effective.

CITES MANY ADVANTAGES.

Mr. Boddington, of the Paris chamber, said:—

"The Paris chamber regards the question of great importance. We have been warned that the engineering difficulties are insuperable, but having in view other ferry schemes which have been established (presumably the German-Danish ferry referred to above), we are naturally encouraged to believe that these difficulties are not at all insuperable. Of the manifold advantages of such a ferry, apart from the comfort of passengers, were the carriage of goods without breaking bulk and the doing away of double transit. These advantages will appeal to all men engaged in international commerce. The Channel is a stormy place, but even if the ferry could not be worked for ten, for twenty, or for thirty days in the year, just think of the immense advantage it would be for the remaining days of the year."

The resolution was carried unanimously, and talking with Mr. Boddington, who is a well known lawyer in Paris, a director of the International Railway Company and a leading spirit in the scheme, he told a special correspondent that the main difficulty rested in the obstructionist attitude of the English railways which carry the traffic across the Channel—a dog-in-the-manger policy.

Of course, it will mean the provision of apparatus for the lifting or lowering of the trains to the level of the ferries and the erecting of sheds for the examining of goods and wares, and the building of specially designed steamers to transport the trains bodily across the Straits of Dover; but these are hardly insurmountable difficulties.

AMERICAN TOURISTS.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH.]
LONDON, Saturday.

A GREAT deal is being said just now about the number of Americans who are expected to spend the season in London, but at the present date those who are already on this side of the Atlantic are disporting themselves in Paris or in more genial southerly climes.

Mrs. Potter Palmer, who expected to be in Paris quite a fortnight ago, arrived, but will be back at Carlton House Terrace in May. Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Pell, who are at present in Egypt, intend spending the months of May, June and July in London. The Princess Hatzfeldt returned from the Continent to spend some time at her coun-

Strathallan and Tullibardine to Go Under the Hammer on April 26.

NOTED IN HISTORY FOR 500 YEARS

[SPECIAL DISPATCH.]
LONDON, Saturday.

THERE are rumors of more than one ducal mansion and estate likely to come under the hammer before long. The first big surprise of the kind is the estate and Castle of Strathallan and Tullibardine, belonging to the Earl of Perth, which is to be put at auction to Tokenhouse Yard on April 26.

Not only will the purchaser become the laird of a noble and historic property, but he will, should he so desire, be able to buy the fine family portraits by Lawrence and Allan Ramsay, and a magnificent collection of rare old Chinese porcelains made early last century by the then Earl of Perth, who held a high diplomatic appointment in China. He will also have the chance of purchasing the antique furniture and works of art generally, which include a number of choice pieces of the much coveted black Boule in the shape of cabinets, clocks and commodes, besides other fine antiques.

Both Strathallan Castle and the Drummonds (the family name of the Earls of Perth) have been closely associated with Scottish history since the middle of the fourteenth century. The present handsome battlemented castle is, however, a comparatively modern building of a little more than a hundred years old enclosing the central tower of the original castle.

The estate is well wooded and exceedingly picturesque and contains various buildings of great interest, notably Tullibardine Chapel, a fifteenth century fane in which are the tombs of the Strathallan family. It is in the form of a cross, and tradition has it that the four sides were built by the four daughters of the then Earl of Tullibardine, the fifth daughter, who was to have built the tower, dying before its completion. There is one relic on the estate which may interest a certain circle in America.

That is Malloch's oak, on which a sixteenth century corn merchant named Malloch was hanged by an enraged and starving populace for "cornering" meal during a time of dearth and famine. The branch on which this early trust magnate was lynched has rotted away long ago, though the rest of the tree remains hale and hearty.

Another quaint relic of olden times is the "Tullibardine chair tree," which, owing to its peculiar formation, permitted of a commodious platform being erected among its boughs, from which the lairds of Tullibardine and their friends could witness the various feats of strength and skill exhibited by their retainers in the surrounding arena, bounded by a turf dyke, remains of which are still visible. The bole of this forest monarch is about 40 feet, its girth 17 and its age about 60

YEARS, while Malloch's oak is about the same age and boasts a girth of 19 feet. The estate contains a little less than 6,400 acres and is celebrated for its shooting and fishing and also for its fine avenue of ancient trees, especially oaks and chestnuts.

On the death, in 1902, of the fourteenth Earl of Perth, whose portrait is shown in the accompanying illustration, the earldoms of Perth and Melfort, which had been united since 1800, became again separated. This was due to the difference in the terms of remainder, the earldom of Melfort being open to female succession, while the earldom of Perth went to the nearest male relative, Viscount Strathallan, involving the absorption of the latter title.

CONDEMN PLAN OF AN ATLANTIC RACE

English Experts Think Danger of Such Yachting Contest Too Great.

SHOWS RISK TO BE RUN

Rear Admiral Montagu Suggests That Course Begin and End in American Waters.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH.]
LONDON, Saturday.

YACHTSMEN of the United Kingdom have evinced keen interest in the proposition advanced by the Atlantic Yacht Club, of New York city, for an international yacht race across the Atlantic next year. Opinion as to the desirability of such an event has varied greatly, however. It has been contended by some English experts that the dangers are so great as to be almost prohibitory. Others have held that such a race would probably result in the bringing out of an especially constructed sailing craft which by its very peculiar features of construction would have the advantage from the crack of the starting cannon unless involved handicaps were imposed, just as the shallow bodied schooner Atlantic took down with ease the German Emperor's cup in the sailing race from Sandy Hook to the Lizard in 1905.

AGAINST THE PLAN.

Among the English yachting authorities who recently have given expression to their individual opinions in the matter is Rear Admiral Victor Alexander Montagu, R. N., retired, who in a formal communication to the Field, which has evoked extensive and interesting comment, said in part:—

"Much as all yachtsman will appreciate this proposed hospitality, I should like to suggest that the racing part of it should begin and end in American waters, because, in my humble opinion, I think it very questionable, looking at it in a sporting sense, whether it is fair to ask seamen to run the risks they are bound to have while crossing this silver streak, so called, in the modern racing craft under their conditions of construction and general cutter rig so much in vogue. I will only mention a few instances showing the risks attached. Are these fin-shaped keels adapted to insure a vessel being able to lay to in heavy weather when their abnormal weight is concentrated on a very short length of keel? Are cutters with enormous main booms easily handled before the gale, during the gale, and after the gale is over in a huge Atlantic swell? Are crews safe on the decks of vessels with absolutely no bulwarks, whose decks may be swept fore and aft for days together?

WEATHER UNRELIABLE.

"It is of no use contemplating a lovely passage across. Atlantic weather, if only of a moderately bad sort, is virtually a gale of wind for racing vessels of modern day construction. Fancy running with a strong quartering wind and rolling sea in a cutter with the main boom in the water at every roll, and perhaps fifteen feet of the after lurch trailing in the water, force of the wind only six and the barometer still falling! What then? And it may be during the night! We are just as good seamen as we ever were, and nothing can surpass the capabilities of crews that man our racing yachts, but our ships are very different from those of former days, and we know perfectly well what took place in the days of the Henrietta, the Dauntless and in other races across, when yachts were far better adapted to be 'sea boats' than now. And, after all, is there much excitement and interest in looking out and scanning the distant horizon from Sandy Hook to see a speck on the water denoting the first craft in sight when the next vessels might only follow two days later?

"I have no wish to throw cold water on this contemplated race. I only wish to balance the nature of things, but I will end in simply stating that the whole object of the race is conceived in a sporting sense, and I do not think you can associate sport with it when you are running considerable risk to life in your attempts to produce it."

The Field, summarising the opinions of those who think as does Rear Admiral Montagu, has commented thus upon the proposed event:—

"If it is suggested that the yachts which may take part in this race should be our largest racing cutters we can only say that all experienced yachtsmen will entirely agree that the yachts are not fit for the work, and that it would be unfair to ask seamen to run the risks such a race would incur."

PICTURES CRUELTY AT CHURCH DOORS

London Pastor Posts Photographs in Crusade Against Feathered Millinery.

SEES SOME DECREASE

[SPECIAL DESPATCH.]
LONDON, Saturday.

WOMEN who persist in wearing osprey feathers or the aigrette of the white heron, as it is best known, when attending services in Holy Trinity Church, Sloane street, must display an amount of courage entitling them to medals accordingly. For, with the object of convincing such visitors that they are abetting cruelty, thoughtlessly perhaps, the rector, the Rev. H. R. Gamble, has affixed a series of photographs from life at the church entrance, showing the pitiful history of the bird from which the feathers are taken.

The first picture of this series shows a photograph of the feathers as they are commonly seen on feminine headgear, bearing the caption "The White Badge of Cruelty." Other photographs show how the bird is shot by the hunter soon after its young are hatched and how the young birds die in starvation in their helplessness.

"I have reason to believe that the pictures have caused a decrease in the number of such feathers displayed on hats worn in this church," said Dr.

MATINEE HAT, LATEST HORROR FROM PARIS

Gamble, "and I think much good would be done if other churches would take up the protest against this cruelty practised at the dictates of fashion by displaying similar pictures in their corridors. One cannot expect, of course, women to discard hats which they already have bought, but it probably has had a deterring effect on those who are buying new hats. I fancy there usually is an outburst of feathered millinery about the time of the Ascot race meeting. So I usually make strong references to the subject a t the third Sunday after Trinity."

A "CHANTECLER" ASCOT.

In the face of this novel crusade initiated by Dr. Gamble the prediction comes from the smart millinery shops that this year's Ascot meeting will be what is termed a "Chantecler" Ascot.

The arguments addressed by some milliners to hesitant customers that the aigrettes offered are "not real, but manufactured," have been made a target by Professor Ray Lankester, director of the Natural History Museum at South Kensington.

"It is absolutely impossible," said he, "to make artificial feathers that will in any way resemble the genuine plumage. An osprey never has been imitated."

"Which proves," asserted another leader in the crusade, that it is the arguments that are manufactured in the case of customers who hesitate because of this very proposition of cruelty. 'Waste produce,' 'plumes picked up in enormous quantities and in perfect condition on the walls of China' and 'feathers of poultry' and 'heron farms of the ostrich type' are but dreams to a milliner's liking. It is not true that the birds 'shed' their plumage. It is torn from them by the hunters who shoot them to satisfy the demands of fashion.

In the case of the white heron, from whose crest is taken the 'aigrette,' the osprey, or aigrette, it is necessary to shoot the birds in the brooding season, for only then are the finest feathers developed. Thus the young are left to die. Should women persist in creating the demand for such a sacrifice of life? And if the practice is not stopped a species of the world's most beautiful birds must soon become extinct. I hope others will take up the crusade. Much of the trouble is due to woman's thoughtlessness."

Mere man, who has had his patience tested by the diameter and altitude of feminine headgear, is interested in Dame Fashion's dictates in this line. And here is what a "foremost authority" has to say in the Globe:—

"Larger and larger come the new hats. Higher and higher climb the feathers. More and more oblique is the angle which these hats are to be worn. Big enough, the flowers with which they are trimmed are quite small. The chief materials for covering huge shapes are moire and satin. A tan colored hat has five beautiful black feathers tossing from the crown, and apparently tied with a black velvet ribbon with each end over the shoulder to below the waist.

As a result, knowing that women will require larger pins for their hats, London men are hoping that some member of the London County Council will have the temerity to emulate that Chicago Alderman who has determined that every shall have some relief from the dangers of the monster hatpin other than shielding himself in armor. One of the latest 'confections' of feminine headgear is two and a half yards in diameter. As a result of additional worry photographs of what is described as the "latest hairdressing horror from Paris" are finding their way into the weekly periodicals.

The smartest is said to be the "mattress mop," which is a structure something like a skyscraper built, horizontally, from the

MANAGER WINNER AT MONTE CARLO

Mr. John Malone, of London Adelphi, Says Tables Paid for His Holiday.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH.]
LONDON, Saturday.

VERY few men come back from Monte Carlo as did Mr. John Malone. Mr. Malone is the manager of the Adelphi Theatre, and he is also the victim of a bad cold. Every winter for four years Mr. Malone has passed four weeks at Monte Carlo and, come back a winner from the Casino, and also with a cold. This time, he tells me, he was so fortunate as not to have spent one penny that he took with him for his holiday. The Casino tables paid for it. He thinks, however, that his persistent luck there does not counterbalance the persistent cold. He says he is never going again.

Do you believe him?

A clergyman in Hoxton of the name of Bryant preached a sermon and used for his text Mr. H. B. Irving's performance of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." In the course of his sermon he said that it was better for a man to go and see a good play like this than to go and listen to a bad sermon.

This is certainly a sincere compliment to Mr Irving, but Dr. Bryant apparently forgets that you can listen to a bad sermon for nothing, while it costs as. 6d. to listen to any kind of a play. If theatres were free I wonder what would happen to the churches.

Immediately after the short life of "The Climax" that delightful American actor, Mr. Russ Whytal, bought himself a bicycle. £5 worth of bicycling clothes, took the train to Dover, and is now wandering around the Continent somewhere on his wheel. He has no definitely arranged route—he will go where fancy takes him although fancy is not the name of his bicycle. Mr. Whytal intends to pass about four months drifting in this way, and heading always for sunshine. The London climate and the short run of "The Climax" after his wonderfully good per-

Thinks 40,000 Ton Battle Ship Probability

British Naval Expert Says Armored Cruiser with More or Heavier Guns Will Be Fighting Craft of the Future, as He Discusses America's Proposed 32,000 Ton War Vessel.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH.]
LONDON, Saturday.

FOLLOWING the proposal to build 32,000-ton battle ships for the United States Navy, the discussion of the problem of battle ship construction in the future which took place at the spring meeting of the Institute of Naval Architects, during which the possibility of 40,000-ton fighting ships of that type was mentioned, attracted unusual attention.

Rear Admiral R. H. S. Bacon, who led the discussion, said:—

"The race between gun and armor which has been going on for more than half a century is being decided for the moment in favor of the gun. Facts point to a steady increase in the size of guns, and the sole limitation as regards progress in the size of the gun carried is the increase in displacement necessary. If the gun is to be increased in size on the same displacement one of the following three things must happen:—(1) The number of guns must be reduced, or (2) the armor protection must be reduced, or (3) the speed must be reduced. The whole crux of the question seems to lie in the consideration as to whether a large ship or a small ship is more likely to be lost from the attack of a torpedo. Constructionally there seems no doubt that the larger the ship the more likely she is to survive the blow of a torpedo. In building the small ship speed, size of gun and power of each hit are sacrificed.

PROBABLE INCREASE.

"All the considerations of offence and defence point to increase in size of battle ships as modern gun construction advances. But since the modern battle ship no longer holds the supreme position which in the old days made the battle ship the sole ultimate arbiter of sea power, it is improbable that, as the torpedo improves, battle ships unable to defend themselves against any kind of torpedo craft will be built merely to fight battle ships. The functions of the large cruiser will therefore be assumed by the battle ship, high speed will become more and more necessary and armor protection will be less accentuated than at present. The link between the ocean going destroyer and the battle ship will become closer, and we may reasonably expect that the huge monsters of the future will always be accompanied by torpedo craft of high speed as defensive and offensive satellites.

A FURTHER PREDICTION.

"The battle ship as now known will probably develop from a single ship into a battle unit consisting of a large armored cruiser with attendant torpedo craft. Line of battle, as we now know it, will be radically modified, and the fleet action of the future will, in course of time, develop into an aggregation of duels between opposing battle units. The tactics of such unit open up a vista of most exhilarating speculation, and will afford to the naval officer of the future a scope for his tactical skill never dreamed of by us or our predecessors. The whole future is pregnant with radical obliteration of our present notions as regards tactics; but we may confidently prophesy that size of ships and power of guns will increase and increase."

Admiral Sir Gerard Noel, who is opposed to the big battle ship, said:

"There is no doubt in my mind that it was the rapid hitting of the Japanese that enabled them to beat the Russians in the battle of Tau-shima, and that rapidity was due to the six inch rather than the heavy gun. I think that the weight of machinery, &c., which contributed to the speed of battle ships, &c., would be better utilized if put into guns and armor."

Admiral Charles C. Penrose Fitzgerald, who, on the other hand, is an advocate of the big ship, said:—

"I think there is a possibility of battle ships approaching forty thousand tons in size. There is no use in building second class ships. It seems to me that the best armored cruiser, with thinner armor, more or heavier guns, and greater speed, will be the fighting ship of the future."

150 MILE SPEED HIS PREDICTION

[SPECIAL DESPATCH.]
LONDON, Saturday.

SHOULD Mr. J. Sutherland Warner, a prominent English railway expert, see his ideas practically realised there will be no denying that we are living in a fast age. He is authority for the assertion that a speed of one hundred and fifty miles an hour by railway trains is technically possible to-day and will be commercially feasible within the next ten years, so long as the railway serves great centres of population yielding a large amount of tram.

"The motive power, of course, would have to be electricity," said Mr. Warner. "Naturally, too, the high horse power required for the attainment of such speed would necessitate motors of enormous size and weight. In order to carry such tremendous weight safely it would probably be necessary to use three, if not four, rails.

"The great problem, however, would be how to deal with the resistance of the air. There are three methods by which this could be met. One of these would be to construct the train cigar shaped, with the sides of the carriages oiled or varnished so as to make them as smooth as possible.

"Another way would be to reduce the friction on the track by fitting wings, or lifting planes, all around the train, the object being to utilise the resistance of the atmosphere to lift the weight from the track and thereby reduce the track resistance.

"The third method would be not to run the train through the air at all. This could only be done by running it in a tube from which the air had been evacuated in advance of the speeding train by powerful pumps."

AEROPLANES TO RACE.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH.]
LONDON, Saturday.

BRITISH sportsmen are in high hopes that England may lay claim to the first actual "duel of the air"—the first point to point cross country aeroplane race. This hope rests on the fact that terms for such a race practically have been arranged between Mr. Alfred Rawlinson, who has made a number of successful flights in this country and on the Continent, and Mr. J. T. C. Moore-Brabazon, who took down the first prize of £1,000 at Shellbeach for the first circular flight of one mile in England on a British built aeroplane.

Mr. Rawlinson, who has asserted his intention of using a Farman biplane fitted with a Darracq engine, was the challenger. His novel proposition was picked up at once by Mr. Moore-Brabazon, who suggested that they should fly the race at the Royal Aero Club grounds at Eastchurch. The challenger contended, however, that it would be more sportsmanlike if they had a cross country race, where obstacles would have to be contended with, rather than merely describing aerial circles above a regular aviation field.

After La Grippe

"I had suffered several weeks with LaGrippe. Had pains in my head and eyes. It felt as though there was a heavy weight on the top of my head, until it seemed that my brain would burst. I was so nervous that I could not rest or sleep. When I dozed off I would awake with a sudden jerking of my whole body. Dr. Miles' Nervine, Heart Remedy and Nerve and Liver Pills cured me. A number of friends have since realized the same benefits."

MRS. ALVIN H. LOCKS,
Seabrook, N. H.

The after effects of LaGrippe are often more serious than the disease, as it leaves the system in a weakened condition that invites more serious troubles, such as pneumonia, etc.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine

LECTURE ON. JEANNE D'ARC WAS A SPLENDID SUCCESS

Rev. Dr. Llwyd Pleased a Large Audience in St. John's Sunday School Last Night.

A TREAT INDEED

A most interesting lecture was given last evening at St. John's church by Rev. Dr. Llwyd on Jeanne d' Arc, the maid of Orleans.

This young maiden, only seventeen years of age, obtained a wonderful name among the countries of the world by obtaining the emancipation of her country. She, who was to play such an important part in the history of her country, was born in 1412, her parents being Isabell Romaine and Jacques de Arc. Jeanne was educated by nature and she seemed too religious for a child of her age. Now at this time there were predictions afloat that France was to be saved by the hands of a woman, and in a short time these foretellings were fulfilled.

While Jeanne was standing near a church in her lowly town a noise was heard, which seemed to be that of St. Michael, and said, "Go and save your country and crown the King of France. These ideas smouldered in Jeanne and at last they decided the destiny of the country of which she was a daughter. She explained her ideas to her father, but was repulsed. She felt to the depth of her conviction that she was the chosen one to deliver her country.

In order to test the truth of her visions and the strength that she had been inspired with, a mock king was placed on the throne, when Jeanne entered to address the French King. Immediately she chose the real King, Charles, and said, "I came here by God to crown you King." An investigation was made of Jeanne's character, and she proved that her mission was true. The King dispelled all clouds of trouble from his mind and thought at least that Jeanne's integrity would inspire the flagging soldiers.

After five bloody events in which Jeanne played a most striking part, foreign rule was crushed in France and the girl's mission was fulfilled. For her reward she was granted that the town of her birth would be exempt from taxation.

The English King swore vengeance on Jeanne and in the course of a few months she was captured and burned at the stake. A priest who stood loyal to her interests and did not desert her then, heard her pronounce the last word, "Jesus." The triumph of her enemies was now completed.

Rev. Dr. Llwyd concluded his lecture by answering the question, "What does Jeanne d' Arc, living in the fifteenth century, mean to people in the twentieth?"

This century is the age of woman, and Jeanne d' Arc presents a superb example of unselfishness. Suggestions to every mother can be obtained from Jeanne d' Arc's life.

A vote of thanks to Dr. Llwyd was moved by Sheriff Hall and seconded by Mr. Mowat. The motion was unanimously carried.

The evening was closed by the singing of the National Anthem.

POST CARD COLUMN

To the Editor of The Examiner:

The city aldermen, including Alderman Turner, have taken a forward step in giving us freedom from the dog nuisance and apparently the dogs are at their heels and we are likely to hear a whine for about four weeks or till the Examiner closes its columns to a threadbare subject.

Every thinking citizen endorses the action of the Council, I am sure, and if there is any question of legality I am sure the Council will azolish the tax, and let he who greatly loves a dog be jealous enough to keep him to himself.—Yours,

APPRECIATIVE.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I would like to ask if Ald. Turner has the authority to run things all his own way in the Council. I see by last night's Examiner that the city solicitor doubts the legality of the dog by-law and Ald. Turner said that the by-law was to go ahead. Ald. Morgan and Buller want the leash clause thrown out. Now why cannot Ald. Morgan and Buller have their way. I think they have as much right to have their way as Ald. Turner. There is no necessity for this by-law in Peterborough. There are a large number of dog owners in the city and you bet at next election of aldermen we will vote for those men who opposed this absurd by-law, and those who organized it won't be in it at all when the poll returns come in. Thanking you for your valuable space, I remain,

A DOG OWNER.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir.—Regarding this doggone by-law, I would like to say that I don't see what the aldermen are made of to let a by-law such as that to pass. One would certainly expect more from an alderman of two years' standing. I say Turner down. If he will pay taxes for a dog that is tied up in the back yard, I will not make an old maid of myself leading a dog around on a string. Thanking you for this space, I am, Mr. Editor, yours truly,

"TIGE."

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—It amused me last evening when I read Tag's letter in your paper. I think Mr. Tags or Tacks which is better, has no lawn or is not a lover of flowers or he would think it proper and good judgment of Mr. Turner to see that the nuisance would be put out of sight for myself and my wife is annoyed trying to keep the verandah clean, but is impossible while those worthless curs is allowed to run at large. I do not think we live in such a wild country that we need a lot of prowling dogs to guard us. They do more harm in a week than all the good they will do in five years,—Yours truly,

A Lover of Nice Canines.

Sir,—In answer to "One Who Likes Dogs," I wish to say although his needlessly coarse and abusive letter does not really call for a reply, that I did not cast any reflections on girls wheeling perambulators. My object was to show that men, however much they admire women do not care to be engaged in an effeminate occupation, such as leading a dog by a string would be. The whole letter was written in a joking way.—Yours, etc.,

DOGGONER.

WITH ADULT BIBLE CLASS OF ST. PAUL'S CHURCH

Annual Meeting and Election of Officers —Rev. Mr. Pogue's Teaching Appreciated—Social Evening.

The annual meeting of Mitto Adult Bible class of St. Paul's church was held last night in the Sunday school hall. There was a large attendance of members. Rev. Mr. Pogue, the teacher, opened the meeting with the doxology and prayer.

In the absence of the president of the class, Mr. J. C. Shook, the routine business of the meeting was conducted by Rev. Mr. Pogue, who reviewed the history and organization of the class and adverted to various places of the work during the next two years.

The election of officers was then proceeded with, with the following result:

President—J. C. Shook, re-elected.
Vice-President—W. A. Logan.
Secretary—W. J. Stacey.
Financial Secretary—W. H. Middleton.

The following committees were appointed—Membership, Devotional, Social and Missionary.

During the evening several instrumental and vocal selections were rendered, after which the following resolution was moved by Mrs. J. C. Garvin:

That the members of Mitto Adult Bible class desire to record their deep sense of gratitude to our faithful teacher, Rev. Robt. Pogue, for his exposition of the truth, and his untiring interest in the spiritual welfare of his class.

The resolution was carried amid enthusiasm, and Mr. Pogue feelingly acknowledged the hearty sentiments of the members.

The class then partook of dainty refreshments, generously provided by the ladies, for whose thoughtfulness all present showed their appreciation.

GENERALLY SPEAKING

An Explanation.

This column has been established as a medium for those who having ideas to which they wish to give expression still feel a diffidence in regard to putting such in print either above their own signature or some nom-de-plume. This explanation is rendered necessary by the fact that many people seem to think that everything appearing in this column emanates from the editorial department of the Examiner. Generally Speaking is merely the mouthpiece of such as apply to the Examiner to make note of current events. The chats on literary subjects which occasionally appear are of course not included in this category.

Suggestions from our readers are always acceptable, and if found suitable, will find ready access to this column.

About Dogs.

The dog question has created, and is still creating, quite a furore amongst owners and fanciers in the city. Sifting all the arguments thoroughly and separating the badgering and bantering from the material parts of the question, the matters resolves itself into a simple query, "Is the leashing of animals, if permissible by the law, the most effective way of tackling the problem?" Nobody denies for a moment that there are altogether too many homeless, and ill-conditioned curs roaming our streets. It would be a blessing to the citizens if these were wiped out of existence, for they are, without a doubt, an unmitigated nuisance. The aldermen are confronted with a problem that is not easy of solution. In civic affairs, as in politics, a line of action lying between two extremes has often been found the soundest and most efficacious to follow. Letting the dogs roam at their sweet will is one extreme, insistence upon constant imprisonment at home, and control whilst abroad is another. It has been suggested that a middle course might find favour with every one, viz., to enforce the law on the lines laid down by the Council for a given length of time, say one month. This would give ample time for the dog catchers to gather in the waifs and strays that at present roam the streets and make night hideous with their uproar.

Moving Picture Shows.

The moving picture shows have also been coming in for a certain amount of attention, and we are asked by super-fervid enthusiasts to give an unqualified condemnation of them. Giving an entirely unprejudiced opinion, as being under no financial obligation to anyone of the three now operating in town, the writer cannot honestly see why there should be any outcry against their operation, provided they are properly kept. There are several things, however, that might be improved, to the benefit both of the owners and of the public who attend the spectacles. For one thing, there might be a little less of blood and thunder variety of melodrama and a complete elimination of the vulgar vaudeville element. There is plenty of vaudeville that is absolutely clean and a pleasure to see and listen to, but the sooner the vulgar barbarian who makes obscene jokes from the stage and twits the girls in the audience is taken from the performance, the better for the general public. People say that there are other objections to five cent shows, but is so we do not know of them. All we do know is that a five cent show, if properly conducted, can be made the vehicle of a wonderful amount of instruction and of a great deal of innocent enjoyment to young and old alike. ?

Telephone Directory.

Several gentlemen have asked us to write again in reference to what appeared in these columns some few weeks ago as to the need of a special telephone directory for the town. There is evidently need of such an innovation or so many business men would not ask us to mention the matter. It might be a good suggestion to advise these gentlemen to apply to the Telephone Company themselves. A round robin to the company or even a letter from a few influential business men would certainly ensure a courteous reply and a certainty of attention being given to the matter.

Profanity on the Streets.

A well known resident of Peterborough called in yesterday to ask us to enter as strong a protest as possible against the foul language and horrible blasphemy that is indulged in to so great an extent on the Peterborough streets. He cited as a case in point that he had just overheard two men, while ladies were passing, indulging in the grossest blasphemy and ribaldry. "It made my blood boil," he remarked "to find that inhabitants of this city could so far forget themselves as to indulge in such language, especially when ladies were within hearing." It is not a pleasant subject to allude to, neither is it one that the police can by the greatest stretch of imagination be supposed to control, save in such few cases, as they may happen to overhear the culprits. There is an old saying that "one cannot expect anything from a hog but a grunt," and if men will indulge in such unseemly chatter it simply marks them as unfit for human society. The only cure lies in the home, where the inculcation of maxims of purity and training in true manliness can best be imparted.

Style, Quality & Reasonable Prices Commend These Hats

THIS trinity of desirable attributes renders our present showing notable among Spring Millinery Offerings. Seldom are all these qualities united—really smart Millinery usually bears a high price tag and inexpensive varieties generally fall far short of the desirable in style and quality.

AS THE result of careful planning we are able to include in this selection the newest and most effective of spring designs—each with that indescribable smartness about it that bespeaks the work of a clever milliner—whether it originated in Paris, New York or in our own workrooms—each marked at a price which would represent a bargain even if attached to a hat of much inferior grade.

THERE is no reason why the woman of the modest dress allowance should not boast as pretty Millinery as her more fortunate sister if she comes here to purchase it.

PRACTICAL and dressy style, simple and elaborate models, all the new colouring and fashionable straws are to be had for the choosing.

Gleanings of Fashion's Metropolis

It's not surprising in the least that women become enthusiastic over our immense display of Spring Fancies in Wash Fabrics. They are gleaned from the choicest stocks on the American continent and are the very essence of Fashion's dictates for Spring and Summer, 1910. ¶ The FOULARDS this season are in great popularity with those "old yet new" COTTON CREPES closely following them. The STRIPED VOILES in cotton fabrics are immensely shown this season in the most beautiful shade effects, real charming summer dress materials for hot weather wear, as well as the POPLINS and COTTON PANAMAS.

Not in the least unimportant are the new VICTORIA SILVER STRIPED BATISTES. They reflect the highest grade of art possible in the weaving and dyeing business.

The REPS and WALE CORDS are heavier fabrics and are very suitable for the summer suit, but the beauty of our stock consists of almost any of these goods

"As You Like Them"

(no two costume lengths alike) every one an individual dress or suit length and only one of a kind. Isn't this a consideration worth while? Prices range from 25c to $1.00 a yard by the costume length

FOULARDS FROM 25c YARD UP.—These fabrics are very soft finished, with a rich silky appearance, shades of Paris tan, blue, green, helio and pink, in large and small coin and fancy spot designs.

THE NEW CREPES, 25c YARD UP.—Some very rich plain, and novelty stripe effects, some in delicate self toned embroidery designs; shades: green, blue, grey, helio, pink and Paris tan, exclusive patterns and the new shades. In plain, there are also old rose and ashes of rose.

STRIPED VOILES UP FROM 45c YARD.—The new shades, such as the Chanticler, ashes of rose and new browns, are shown in this natty fabric; a beautiful light weight airy summer dress material in the new stripe patterns.

POPLINS AND COTTON PANAMAS fill a very enviable position in the cotton dress fabric world to-day. They meet the demand for a mid weight goods for dresses and suits, come in all the new 1910 shades, in plain and monotone stripe effects, ranging in price from 45c yard up in exclusive costume lengths.

WALE CORDS AND REPS.—Last year the wale cords, diagonal stripes and reps were extremely popular and this season they're none the less in demand. The shades consist of the new tones, such as the Chanticler, Paris tan, Grape shades, Catawba, Aeroplane blue, new greys, blues, browns and greens. These fabrics make beautiful two piece suits and dresses. Price in 6-to 7 yard lengths, per yard, $1.00.

THE NEW YORK HIT—(Net-over Foulard).—The New Yorkers this season are using a real Brussels net over the colored foulards, giving a very filmy pleasing effect. This, we have a very realistic imitation of, in one line of new foulards we are showing, a coin spot pattern with an over design of Brussels net. Something very dainty for dainty dressers. Price 50c yard in dress lengths.

NEW EMBROIDERED CHAMBRAYS.—Pretty colourings, new stripes, with dainty embroidery patterns is the description in short. Shades consist of pink, blue, helio, brown, green and grey, prices range 25c yard up, costume lengths only.

You can't go wrong in your selection if you choose one of these exclusive high-grade costume lengths—every one of them is this season's goods—they're the very latest things shown anywhere—strictly 1910 and are the Advance Spring and Summer Fancies. See these to-day. Main Floor Right.

GOING TO SYRACUSE

Chief Howard and Ald. Metheral Will Represent City at the Fire Chiefs' Convention.

Fire Chief Howard and Ald. Metheral will represent the city at the International Fire Chief's Association at Syracuse, N. Y., from Aug. 22 to 26.

This was decided at the meeting of the Fire, Water and Light Committee last night, on motion of Ald. Buller, seconded by Ald. Batten.

Alderman Graham objected to the expenditure of $100 for such a purpose. "I don't believe in it," he said emphatically, "and will oppose the recommendation when it comes up in the Council."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

April 10, 1910.

The Missions of the Twelve. Matt. 9:35-10; 15, 40-42.

Golden Text. Freely ye have received, freely given. Matt. 10:8.

Verses 35, 36,—What is "the gospel of the kingdom?"

Jesus spent his whole time in caring for the bodies and souls of the people, to what extent are all men under obligation to do the same thing?

What proportion of the people in this community are like "sheep having no shepherd?"

Verses 37, 38.—Is the harvest today, as plenteous or more plenteous, than in the day of Jesus and what is the evidence?

What proportion of the crop is being lost, for the want of harvesters to gather it in?

HOW CAN WE BEST INCREASE THE NUMBER OF THE HARVESTERS? (This question must be answered in writing by members of the club.)

Verse 1.—What is the difference between the power given to the original twelve apostles and that given to ministers, or other godly men today?

The original twelve apostles had power, (1) To preach the gospel of the kingdom, (2) To remit sins, (3) To cast out devils, (4) To cure all manner of diseases, and (5) To raise the dead. (Verse 8.) How much of this power is still in the church, and what power ought the church to have more than she possesses?

Verses 2-4.—What significance is there, if any, in the fact that Jesus selected apostles to the number of twelve?

What was the occupation, or business individually, of the twelve apostles at the time of their calling?

Did Jesus know the future of each of the apostles at the time he called them?

Verses 5-8.—From this story would you judge that Jesus loved the Gentiles less than he did the Jews, and if not, why did he forbid the apostles going to them?

Verses 9, 10.—Is there any reason to believe that Jesus did not mean the instructions about taking no money, when going on a missionary tour, to be permanent? (See Luke, 22:35, 36.)

Why should not missionaries today adopt the instructions of Jesus as given here, to not provide in advance for their maintenance.?

Verses 11-14.—To what extent are the instructions for the apostles to billet themselves upon those that were worthy, and not to hire their board, applicable to ministers and missionaries to-day?

What sin, or crime, are those guilty of, who refuse to hear God's messengers?

Verse 15.—What punishment does God render to the individual, the city, or the country which rejects the message of God, and how does he inflict it?

Verses 40, 41.—Why may we be sure if we teach the gospel of the kingdom, that some will certainly receive our message?

If we receive a follower of Jesus we receive Jesus himself, and that is counted to us as receiving God, so Jesus states here; now what follows from this, or what does it imply?

What is the reward of a prophet, and that of a righteous man, both of which we may expect to receive if we entertain the servants of God and receive their message?

Verse 42.—What is the reward of a smile, a kind word, or a generous act to a child, prompted by a loving heart in which Jesus dwells?

SON THREW APPLES AT FORK IN MAN'S MOUTH

New Vaudeville Act Was a Hit Until the Son Made a Miscue—Man is in Hospital.

NOT BADLY INJURED

New York, April 8.—Instead of going on the vaudeville stage, Theodore Jackson went to the Eastern District Hospital, Williamsburg, yesterday. Jackson is forty-three years old, and lives at No. 79 Meserole street, Williamsburg. Although only a modest shirt waist maker he had had great aspirations to be a headliner on the "two-a-day circuit." For some time past Jackson has been practising an act that he believed would be a winner. Jackson would stand with a fork stuck between his teeth while his son Walter would hurl fruit and vegetables at him from long distance, and the man would catch the missiles on the prongs of the fork. The rehearsals continued for some time, and Jackson thought he was competent to fill vaudeville engagements.

Yesterday he had an open-air tryout with sad results. Young Walter was hurling apples and oranges when one rather fat and juicy apple missed. It was also sent toward the father with two much speed and hit the fork sidewise. This resulted in knocking the fork down the father's throat, while the fruit smashed into both of the man's eyes. It almost blinded him, knocked out two of his teeth and cut his lips. After the son took the fork out of his father's mouth and the crushed apples from his eyes he escorted him to a drug store where an ambulance was summoned as the actor was painfully injured.

SLICK "CON" MEN SELL TICKETS TO BIG FIGHT

TICKETS VALUELESS

Special to The Examiner.

New York, April 8.—A gang of slick confidence men is working Broadway and the sporting resorts selling "tickets of admission" to the great arena in which the Jeffries-Johnson fight will take place next Independence Day. It is said that this gang has disposed of hundreds of tickets at prices ranging all the way from $10 to $100, and also has sold transportation between New York and 'Frisco.

These tickets are worthless, and the gang is believed to have cleaned up a large sum during the few days it has been at work. There are some genuine tickets for sale, and expensive arrangements for luxurious transportation to the Golden City can be made through the Gleason-Rickard interests and their representatives. But most of the tickets which guileless and unsuspecting "sports" have sunk their money in along the Night-Light Alley will prove to be worth no more than the paper they are printed on.

The tip went along the line yesterday to beware of the smooth-spoken, well-dressed chap with a breezy Western manner, who might approach one with the proposition to sell admission and transportation to the fight. Sometimes he is a "duly-accredited representative" of somebody or other who has something or other to do with the fight, and then again he is "a gentleman in distress" who because he cannot get way in July, having to go to Europe or some other confounded place, would like to dispose of the ticket and transportation he has brought with him from 'Frisco. The corridors of the Broadway hotels and the cafes and restaurants have also been visited by this gentry.

NEW STRENGTH IN THE SPRING

Nature Needs Aid in Making New Health-Giving Blood.

In the spring the system needs toning up. In the spring to be healthy and strong you must have new blood, just as the trees must have new sap. Nature demands it and without this new blood you will feel weak and languid. You may have twinges of rheumatism or the sharp stabbing pains of neuralgia. Often there are disfiguring pimples or eruptions on the skin. In other cases there is merely a feeling of tiredness and a variable appetite. Any of these are signs that the blood is out of order—that the indoor life of winter has told upon you. What is needed to put you right is a tonic, and in all the world there is no tonic can equal Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These Pills actually make new, rich, red blood—your greatest need in spring. This new blood drives out disease, clears the skin and makes weak, easily tired men and women and children bright, active and strong. Miss A. M. Dugay, Lower Cove, N.S., says: "I believe I owe my life to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. My blood seemed to have turned to water. I was pale as a sheet; I suffered from headaches, and floating specks seemed to be constantly before my eyes. As the trouble progressed my limbs began to swell, and it was feared that dropsy had set in and that my case was hopeless. Up to this time two doctors had attended me, but notwithstanding I kept growing worse. It was at this juncture I began using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and after taking a few boxes I was much improved. I kept on using the Pills until I had taken eight boxes, when my health was completely restored."

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Anniversary Services, Knox church, Sunday, April 10th. Preacher, Rev. A. Logan Geggie, Toronto. Banquet Monday evening and address by Rev. Mr. Geggie, "Wit and Humour." Admission 25c. 2d-79

CIVIC RECEPTION

City Council Will Receive Lieut.-Governor Gibson.

The city will tender a civic reception to Lieut.-Governor Col. J. M. Gibson, when he visits Peterborough a week from to-day, to lay the corner stone of the new Knox church.

The details were arranged at a meeting of the Reception Committee last night, at which there were present Ald. Duffus, chairman; the Mayor, Ald. Gillespie, Turner and Phelan, and Rev. H. J. Keith, of Knox church.

It was decided that the whole Council or as many as possible, will meet the Lieutenant-Governor on his arrival on the 11.26 C. P. R. train, and after welcoming him to Peterborough, will drive him around the city, pointing out the principal points of interest until one o'clock, when he will be taken to the home of the Misses Dickson, who will entertain him at luncheon.

The matter of arranging for an address of welcome, if one is thought advisable, was left in the hands of the Mayor and Ald. Duffus, chairman of the Committee, on motion of Ald. Phelan and Gillespie.

FINE PERFORMANCE

Clever Work of Two Youths at Brock Street Roller Rink.

The carnival at the Brock St. Roller Rink last evening passed off very successfully, there being a large number in costume and a very pleasant time was spent. A feature of the evening was the fancy skating of Percy Parrington and Martin Kennealley. These two young amateurs did some remarkably clever turns, and ones that would do credit to any professional troup. Their waltzing on rollers was exceedingly well done, and several fancy and difficult acts were done with ease and alacrity. These youths are deserving of the greatest encouragement. They certainly give an excellent performance on rollers. One thing they do is to jump clean over a line of six chairs. The carnival prize winners were Miss Yelland and Messrs. Hooper and White.

Tone Is Always First

Tone is the most important feature of a piano—because, on the quality and permanency of tone, depends the value of the piano.

The magnificent, singing tone of unapproachable in sweetness, mellowness and majesty—is possible because the New Scale Williams Piano not only is more heavily strung on its massive plate and scale, than other Pianos, but also because of the Harmonic Tone Prolonging Bridge which prevents the introduction of faulty and imperfect tones.

New Scale Williams Piano

If your home needs a piano to complete its coziness, perhaps our plan of buying a New Scale Williams on easy payments, will interest you. Write for full particulars and copies of our illustrated booklets.

A WONDERFUL INVENTION ON EXHIBITION HERE

Transportation Revolutionized — Automatic Delivery of Mails, Freight, Parcels, etc.

The Canadian Automatic Transportation oCmpany Limited is the name o fa new concern which has been organized to establish in Ontario the wonderful electrical system of transportation for the automatic delivery of amils and freight. A miniature system has been set up in the company's offices here at 137 1-2 Simcoe street, where much interest is being taken b ythe public in its operation.

It is principally intended to operate through rural sections; and in these days ofautomobiles, wireless telegraphy, airships and gryoscopes, people are now accepting the introduction of new wonders as a matter of course.

The inventor is Mr. W. C. Carr, of Buffalo, who is president of the Company, and their representatives here are Mr. J. A. Jerkins, local manager and his assistant, Mr. G. H. Kerr, whose practical knowledge in demonstrating its wonderful features are highly praised and admired.

The Carr system provides for surface, elevated, or underground transportation, for freight or passengers, and is operated electrically without either the aid of overhead wires or a third rail, and acn be installed to cover distances from a hundred feet to many miles.

The cars are run on a strong and comparatively inexpensive structure, without attendants when carrying freight or mail, and are controlled from a central station. A special car is made to collect and deliver mail automatically en route, while travelling at a rate of twenty to twenty-five miles an hour.

The new device climbs hills, runs on the level and down grade. The car travels on two rails which are elevated on fork-shaped steel columns set in concrete bases about 100 feet apart. The poles do not take up a lot of room like transmission towers, but may be easily installed along the side of the highway.

The question of adequate, cheap and rapid transportation, for short or long hauls, from mine, farm, mill, timber limit, etc., to shipping point is one that interests every community and is as important as to have satisfactory trunk line service. It is claimed that the mileage is greater, and it costs more to-day to town and draw the products of Canada to the shipping point than it costs to transport the same hundreds of miles after delivery to the trunk line railroads.

The invention furnishes a necessity as important as electric light or the telephone in developing the business of the country. As an investment the stock of the Company may mean a fortune to those securing shares.

Shot Wife for Dancing.

Fort Frances, Ont., April 9.—But twelve months married, a man named Burns shot his bride because she attended a dance against his expressed wishes. He is now in custody and she is dying.

During his absence she attended a dance, going to the home of a lady friend to spend the balance of the night. Burns returning and not finding his wife at home started out with a revolver and, on finding her, fired two shots, both taking effect in the head.

Two Old Residents Dead.

Brockville, April 9.—Word was received here yesterday of the death of John Chapman of North Augusta and E. C. Sliter, Plum Hollow, both prominent in their localities. Sliter was a retired farmer, a justice of the peace, and coroner, and was elected many times to township and counties councils. Mr. Chapman, who was 70 years old, and a merchant and postmaster at North Augusta for 45 years. He, too, was an ex-township and counties councillor.

Roosevelt and Masons.

Paris, April 9.—Mr. Roosevelt's reception of Freemasons during his stay in Rome, has called forth criticism from a section of the royalist and Catholic press.

The Gaulois says that the incident justifies the precautions adopted by the Vatican.

The Eclair accuses Mr. Roosevelt of wreaking the vengeance of a disappointed tourist and punishing "an ungrateful papacy by the bowing down before the idol of Masonry."

In a special despatch from Vienna the claim is made that the Government there has adopted extraordinary precautions to prevent Mr. Roosevelt making "breaks" similar to those which he made in Rome.

Detroit Street Railway Refuses.

Detroit, April 9.—The Detroit United Railway yesterday refused the demands of its conductors and motormen to have their wages increased to 30 cents an hour and 45 cents for overtime from the present rate of 23, 25 and 27 cents.

Arbitration has been suggested as a means of avoiding a strike, and the men have appointed John McVicar of Detroit as their arbitrator. The men, however, insist that only the question of wages shall be arbitrated, while the company insists upon arbitration of the entire agreement between the company and the men, which includes a closed shop provision.

Conductor Foils Train Robbery.

St. Paul, Minn., April 9.—Two masked bandits attempted early yesterday to hold up the "Pioneer Limited," which arrived here at 7.15 a.m.

The men passed through the front sleeper into the rear vestibule. When Conductor Shumway passed through the train, he was stopped by two masked men. Shumway leaped upon the larger of the bandits, but was overpowered. One man then reached down under the steps and cut the air hose and the train came to a stop. The men then jumped off.

Shot Wife in Mistake for Burglar.

Harrisburg, Pa., April 9.—Mrs. Catharine Bomgardner, wife of a well-known plumber, was shot and killed by her husband in mistake for a burglar.

Before daylight, the woman, who had been ill, arose to get some medicine and wakened her husband, who seeing someone moving about the room, opened fire. A coroner's jury rendered a verdict of accidental shooting.

London, April 9.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The master of Elibank, at Manchester, indicated that the Government will resign or dissolve when the Lords decide to reject or suspend the veto resolutions, which presumably will end in May.

A further issue of £4,000,000 three month treasury bills are announced to meet the national expenditure of the last six weeks. The Government has been borrowing at the rate of £4,000,000 weekly.

The Chronicle says there is a growing belief that the political crisis may end in a compromise, the latest theory being that the King may act as a pacificator.

Plans Too Costly.

Kingston, April 9.—Yondie Samet was arrested yesterday for theft at the request of the Montreal police. He is 21 years old, and a traveling merchant.

At the opera house last night members of the Junior Frontenacs were presented with gold watches for their O.H.A. victory. Jim Sutherland, the manager, was also remembered with a timepiece. W. F. Nickle, M.P.P., made the presentations.

The Metallurgy building at Queen's may not be built, as the estimates for the construction is far too high. The cost was to have been met by Prof. Nicol's gift of $40,000, but it will greatly exceed that.

Babe Born on Train.

Moosejaw, Sask., April 9.—When No. 1 westbound train arrived yesterday a twenty-year-old girl and a new-born infant were removed in an ambulance.

The infant was born on the train between this point and Regina, but the girl concealed the fact until a porter's attention was drawn to noises from the toilet-room. They were the wailings of the ned-born babe, which was wrapped in a towel and placed in a cupboard.

C. N. R. Route to Falls.

Niagara Falls, N.Y., April 9.—Belief that the Canadian Northern will begin constructing a line to the Falls was increased yesterday by the completion of a survey of a route to the city. It follows the right of way of the Toronto Niagara Power Co. to the city, crossing the river a short distance below the upper bridge. It is said the company has options for yards here, and likely cross on the proposed trans-Niagara bridge.

Vancouver, B.C., April 9.—During February, the coast output of logs was 250 per cent. greater than during the corresponding month last year, and March and April are keeping up the record, the output being over forty million feet per month.

DOES YOUR SCALP ITCH?

Are Your Hairs Dropping One by One?

If your scalp itches you are doubtless suffering from dandruff. The dandruff germ is digging up your scalp in little flakes, called dandruff and sapping the life of the hair bulb. No hair preparation that is a mere hair stimulant and tonic will cure dandruff, because it won't kill the germ that causes the trouble. Newbro's Herpicide is the latest scientific discovery; and it will kill the germ and you will have no more dandruff, falling hair or baldness. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich.

Deserting Despatcher Sentenced.

Regina, Sask., April 9.—Night Operator Voyer, a C.P.R. despatcher, was sent to jail for three months for deserting his key on Wednesday evening. He was intoxicated. Fortunately danger to trains was averted by a new man taking the key.

Dynamite on Car Tracks.

Montreal, April 9.—Lying right on the Mount Royal avenue street railway track, two men found a dynamite cartridge strong enough to blow twenty-five street cars to pieces. The discovery was made just as an eastbound car was about to pass over.

The two quarrymen who picked it up, say it was a 50,000 dynamite cartridge, the explosion of which would be strong enough to displace 50,000 pounds of earth and gravel.

DAMES AND DAUGHTERS.

Miss Mary Dandridge Spiers has succeeded Miss Alice Blech as social secretary to Mrs. Taft.

A photograph of Mrs. Edward Kitzleberger of Akron, found in the home of her aunt in Newark, N. J., had the effect of bringing her an estate of between $8,000 and $10,000.

Dr. Mary Hoffman Jones is the first woman appointed to give medical attention to the women who seek shelter in the municipal lodging house in New York. Dr. Jones is a Chicago woman.

Miss Mary Gilbert Owens of Germantown, Pa., has a valentine which, she thinks, is the oldest in the United States. The valentine bears the date 1815. It was given to Miss Owens by a relative of the original recipient.

Mrs. Marilla M. Ricker, a lawyer of Dover, N. H., leader in the woman suffrage movement, announces that she is to be a candidate for governor of New Hampshire at the next election. She is to run, she says, on a woman suffrage platform.

Baroness Uchida, wife of the new Japanese ambassador to the United States, is a graduate of Bryn Mawr. Since her marriage twelve years ago she has resided in Pekin and Vienna, but she has kept in touch with the condition of the women of her native country.

The Writers.

The first novel of aviation has just been published. It is by Gabriele D'Annunzio, the famous Italian poet, who has not written a novel for ten years.

Thackeray was six feet two inches in height, and Sir H. W. Lucy says the great novelist wore a 7⅛ inch hat, beating Dickens and John Bright by a full half inch.

Maurice Maeterlinck, whose literary craft is a marvel of the present day, is a delightful talker to one or two friends. When faced by half a dozen or more he becomes as shy as a schoolgirl and cannot be driven into speech.

Robert Underwood Johnson, who has been chosen to succeed Mr. Gilder as the editor of the Century Magazine, has been on the staff of that magazine for thirty-seven years, almost since its first publication. He is a chevalier of the Legion of Honor of France and cavaliere of the crown of Italy.

A Marvelous Invention

A gas range that can be changed to a coal range in three seconds

"Made in Canada"

The Champion Interchangeable can be changed from a gas range to a coal or wood range in three seconds. There isn't a single bolt to remove or a screw to turn. The operation is so easy a child can do it.

In natural gas districts, where gas is liable to fail any time, the owner of the Champion always has a good coal range to rely on. No other range like the Champion—the most convenient range in the world. Takes the place of two ranges (gas and coal), thus saving room in the kitchen.

MY FREE TRIAL TREATMENT MAY CURE YOU

Kingston, Ont., June 6th, 1909.

Dear Mrs. Currah,—I feel so very much better after using the 10 days' treatment of ORANGE LILY you were kind enough to send, that I will not require any more. In fact, I feel entirely well, and it is now a month since I stopped using the treatment. (Miss) F. W. T.

Similar letters to the above are not infrequent, though, of course, such cases are not of long standing. Most women who have suffered for any length of time will require to use ORANGE LILY longer than the Trial Treatment in order to effect a complete cure, but in every case they will be perceptibly benefited. Further, the benefit will be permanent whether they continue to use ORANGE LILY or not. It is not taken internally, and does not contain any alcohol or other stimulant. It is an applied treatment, and acts directly on the suffering organs. In all cases of women's disorders, these organs are congested to a greater or less extent, and congestion just as positively and certainly as the soiling of ammonia or soap on soiled linen. It is a simple chemical problem, and the result is always the same, a step towards better health and complete cure.

In order that every suffering woman may prove its good qualities, I will send enough of ORANGE LILY for 10 day's treatment, absolutely free, to each lady who will send me her address. MRS. FRANCIS E. CURRAH, WINDSOR, ONT. 10

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

MUST DEPEND UPON THE YOUNGSTER IN BIG LEAGUES

Baseball history again repeated itself last season when the development of three bush league players, Adams, Mitchell and Hyatt, did so much to help the Pirates win the pennant. In many campaigns it has been the work of the youngsters, balanced by the older players, that has copped the flag.

When Baltimore won the pennant many years ago the team was laughed at when the season started. Ned Hanlon had a lot of untried youngsters on the bench in the persons of McGraw, Jennings, Keeler and Kelley. They all suddenly developed and became wonders.

The old-timers of that famous team merely served as a balance power. It was these four youngsters who won the pennants.

When the Giants won their first pennant under McGraw it was these four youngsters who won the pennants.

When the Giants won their first pennant under McGraw it was due to the unexpected development of Arthur Devlin as a wonderful third baseman and a hard hitter. At the same time Roger Bresnahan came to the front as a great catcher as well as hard hitter. That wonderful increase in playing power, with veterans like Donlin, McGann, Dahlen, Browne and Gilbert to back them up, sent the Giants to the top like a shot.

Chicago followed on the heels of the Giants as champions from the sudden development of Miner Brown as a great pitcher. He had worked in St. Louis before, but had never been regarded as a wonderful artist in the box. Then Johnny Evers suddenly poked his head above all others as a second baseman and a thinker on the base lines. Joe Tinker was on the other side of the diamond to hold him in the balance. Up went the Cubs, and toward the end of the season the pennant became easy. A trade also helped Chicago, in that it gave them Steinfeldt at third and Sheckard in left field. These two veterans held things safe while the youngsters forged to the top.

Pittsburg rose the first time on the shoulders of Hans Wagner, Tommy Leach and Fred Clarke. With the same men on the team it fell. Their return to the championship last season was the result of the sudden and unexpected development of young talent. Johnny Miller filled the gap at second base. Hyatt came forward as a great pinch hitter and Adams stepped out as a pitching marvel. Toward the end of the season Adams practically carried the Pittsburg team on his shoulders. In the early part of the season he was used as a game saver. What he did during the world's series is well known.

As a further proof of the assertion that it is the development of youngsters that brings a team out of the rut we might point to the Boston Americans. From the bottom they came up on the shoulders of Speaker. This youngster proved himself one of the best hitters that ever broke into the big leagues, and it was due to his sudden development of strength that the Boston Americans began to climb.

SOCIAL PURITY OBJECT OF SERIES OF MEETINGS

Meeting for Men in the Grand Opera House To-morrow Afternoon Will be One of the Features

EDUCATIONAL CAMPAIGN

A series of meetings of more than ordinary importance will be inaugurated in Peterborough to-morrow under Y. M. C. A. auspices by the Rev. J. Aspinall McCuaig of New York, University lecturer in eugenics, and vice-president of the National Christian League for the Promotion of Social Purity, the great purity organization of New York State.

Mr. McCuaig will speak in Charlotte Street Methodist church at 11 o'clock on "Power," and in St. Paul's Presbyterian church at 7 o'clock on "God's Great Problem."

The special meeting of the day will be held in the Grand Opera House at 4.15 in the afternoon when Mr. McCuaig will laddress a mass meeting of men on "Man's Relationship to Woman." From reports of such meetings held in New York, Rochester, Buffalo and other United States cities, it is expected that this will be one of the most significant meetings for men ever held in Peterborough.

These Sunday meetings will be followed by two addresses Monday, one for women only at 3 o'clock in St. Paul's church on "Woman's Responsibility," and a general meeting at 8 o'clock for both men and women in St. Andrew's Presbyterian church on "The White Slave Traffic and Our Children."

On Tuesday afternoon Mr. McCuaig will give the first of a course of three afternoon lectures to women on "Eugenics." This course will be continued Wednesday, and Thursday will cover the care and education of the child from infancy to adolescence. At 8 o'clock Tuesday evening a general meeting will be held in the George Street Methodist church, when Mr. McCuaig will ecture on "Sex and Crime."

In view of the widespread blight of social evil it would appear to be only a matter of time before this movement will draw into substantial cooperation the best citizenship of every community, till it becomes a political factor to a degree to which no reform issue has heretofore approached.

In reference to the general features of the movement, Mr. McCuaig states "the fundamental and greatest problem of society is wrapped up in the relation of the sexes. Through abuse of this relationship the most disastrous evils hve sprung into being, touching with blight the individual, the home ,the community and the state. In the highest fulfilment of this relationship the greatest blessings have been realized to equal scope."

The National Christian League of which Mr. McCuaig is vice-president, numbers among its executive many of the great reformers of the neighbouring republic, such as Bishop Wm. C. Doane, of Albany, Rev. Dr. Sylvanus Stall of Philadelphia, Bishop Samuel Fellows of Chicago, and Mr. Anthony Comstock, of New York. In active opposition to social evil in all forms, and in practical suppression of vice, it holds a unique place.

Under the leadership of the Rev. J. Aspinall McCuaig, United States Vice-President of the League, this move has so commended itself that civic authorities, medical associations and labour federations vie with churches and universities in enthusiastic response and hearty co-operation.

"In every fundamental feature the movement is a crusade on behalf of the child. It arraigns with equal severity the unfaithfulness of parents and the indifference of law-makers.

The child, as the embryo of future influence in the state, is viewed as the seed force of reform.. To effect a realization of parental responsibility and to equip for performance of such are the chief aims of the campaign.

Parents Held Responsible.

Upon the responsibility of parents Mr. McCuaig lays greatest emphasis. "Every child born into the world is born into a heritage of forces. Notable among these are the forces of his own body. The advance from helpless infancy to strong manhood is a process of development and control of these forces. The voice was there in the beginning, but by and by he gets control and speaks. Muscular activity was there, but one day he finds control and walks. Every lesson is a lesson in control.

Boys Fall at Threshold.

"It is a sad fact that three out of every four of the boys of to-day fall, as they go out into the world, at the very threshold of the home, through the impelling impulse and lack of control of sexual passion. There is but one explanation of this sad condition; it is that, from the cradle to young manhood, there is no source of sane, strong, saving information bearing upon the matter—no sweet, clear voice, or wise and purposed heart to clothe the truth in one first and lasting vision, to give the searching mind and will a saving grip. In this concern our children are all orphans—they have neither father nor mother—they are all outcasts — they have neither teacher, preacher, nor friend.

"Against the flood of social evil in the world the only reinforcement of the race is in the hands of parents, in the training of their children.

"The sweet and simple facts about the origin of life, sown in the mind of the little child, by his own mother—from her lips, through her eyes, and living with her love—may, through its effect upon his will, become the character-forming influence of all his days."

Mr. McCuaig has just completed a ten days' campaign of social reform in Syracuse, N.Y., under the direction of the Academy of Medicine, Ministerial Association and University, which reached all classes of the community. Of this work, the Purity Advocate of Philadelphia says:

"Perhaps never before in the history of this country has such general and spontaneous welcome been accorded any movement of social reform as that accorded the educational campaign of the National Christian League for the Promotion of Purity.

THE SHADOW OF A DREAM

In common things I see its wondrous light,
I see its glory in the purpling rose;
Its breath I feel in every wind that blows;
Forevermore it gleams on my rapt sight.
I see its wing immaculate and white
In clouds that pass and in the falling snows;
I see it twinkle where the brooklet flows;
In flame-struck bird I see its beauty bright.
The Shadow of a Dream! Ah, soul of mine!
If navelled in this darksome vale of strife
There be such splendor and such deathless cheer,
How fairer than its symbol or its sign
Must that far country be where radiant clear
The shadow of the dream indeed is Life!

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

HOUSE CLEANING.

The day is fast approaching when private houses will rival hospitals in cleanliness and sanitary furnishings. People are beginning to love cleanliness and to abhor dust and dirt as breeders of diseases and discomfort.

This love of cleanliness has brought about a change in ideas of finishing and furnishing houses. People are demanding that they shall be easily cleaned, and are learning that there must be simple things and simple conditions.

The modern housewife has for her working creed that of William Morris: "Have nothing you do not know to be useful and think to be beautiful."

LESSENING THE DRUDGERY.

That creed means less drudgery and greater enjoyment of life. It means that cosy corners and Oriental dens are no longer their ideals. Stuffiness and stale air are giving way to clear, clean space, for people like to breathe deep these days.

This state of affairs helps toward good housekeeping, for it eliminates much unnecessary work.

The attic and the bonfire are two allies of the courageous housewife. In the first she stores things that are "under suspicion" until she feels that her judgment is final; to the other she assigns things which are of no use to anyone. Every house is full of such things.

They have been put away at odd times, having lost their first usefulness, but kept in the vague hope that they "might be of use some day." It has been necessary to handle them and clean them time and again, or else they have lurked in the dark corner of some kitchen cupboard, covered with dust and dirt.

REMOVING STAINS.

Now that spring is here, the heavy rugs and draperies can be taken out and receive a thorough beating and cleaning. Soiled spots can be removed by turpentine, gasoline, alcohol, chloroform or ether. When the odor has disappeared the articles may be covered with clean newspapers and rolled or folded for packing. They should then be wrapped several times with newspapers.

The odor of printer's ink is not agreeable to moths, and one can afford to be generous with papers. Be careful that they are whole and that the openings of one wrapping are covered by the next paper.

Be sure that no moths are in the goods when packed. Before packing furs clean them by wiping with a soft cloth dipped in alcohol or cologne.

SOME SUGGESTIONS.

A bit of chopped celery and a little cheese added to the creamed potatoes in the cooking make a tasty dish.

Prepare the potatoes this way: Put in a buttered dish, cover with buttered bread crumbs and brown in the oven. By following this hint you will have another way of using up your cold boiled potatoes.

If the shells of fresh-laid eggs are brushed over thoroughly with lard, and the eggs packed, it is a simple method of preserving them.

The lard closes the pores of the shell, and prevents air penetrating it, and also does away with the danger of evaporation of the egg itself.

It is an excellent plan in washing sheer muslin curtains to put them in cheese-cloth bags before immersing them in the water.

The dirt will be removed quite as effectually, and there is little or no danger of the curtains becoming torn in the laundering.

Very Soon.

Ah, soon, too soon,
We may depend upon it,
The men who make the jokes and jabs,
The verselet and the sonnet,
Will turn the hose of effort on
The helpless Easter bonnet!
—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Thirty Thousand a Minute.

"Who is that swarthy man watching the gyroscopic car?" asked the inventor.

"That's a Nicaraguan," whispered his assistant.

"Indeed! Does he contemplate using our car down in the tropical jungles?"

"Oh, no. He is only astonished at seeing anything that has more revolutions than his home country."—Chicago News.

Household Hints.

Take a round piece of cloth, run a rubber in it and keep over the top of meat chopper; no dust and always ready for use.

Wet a towel in cold water and cover all kinds of roasted meats, turkey and chicken to prevent drying. They will retain the flavor and keep moist a long time.

Many families will really suffer from a squeaking hinge for weeks when one application of machine oil or a little heated lard will result in perfect silence.

Occasionally it happens that a crack appears in an otherwise perfect piece of furniture. Melt a little beeswax, color it to match the wood with aniline dye and then press it firmly into the cracks.

Train and Track.

The Formosan railway is about to extend its system by two branch lines, both of which will enter what is called savage territory.

When the railways now being laid down in China are finished the total length of China's railway system will amount to 8,000 miles.

A big railroad in the northwest is replacing its section crew handcars with cars driven by direct connected motors, so light that four men can lift them from the track.

Since introducing the "pay within" cars in Philadelphia the number of accidents to persons has decreased 74 per cent. This is attributed to the arrangement of the closed doors and steps, making it impossible for passengers to get on or off when the cars are moving.

Tales of Cities.

The officially estimated population of Greater London is 7,537,196.

Up to 1789 the chief waterworks of New York city was in Chatham street, now Park row. The water was carted about the city in casks and sold from carts.

Berlin, which is generally looked upon as the foremost city in Europe in the matter of street illumination, has decided on the inverted high pressure gas lamp in preference to electric lights.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

When the guests are expected some little novelty in the way of an entree helps out wonderfully. One such is nut croquettes, very unusual and dainty, made thusly:

Grate enough second-day bread to make two cupfuls, chop in the meal chopper or the nut mill and one-third cupfuls of shelled English walnuts. Stir these together in a basin with a small piece of butter, a tablespoonful of grated onion juice and a teaspoonful of mace. Melt in a skillet one large teaspoonful of butter, with half a teaspoonful of flour; add slowly one cup of sweet milk. Allow this to boil, then add the other ingredients with salt to taste. Add a beaten egg and, when removing from the fire, a teaspoonful of lemon juice. Mix thoroughly and turn upon a platter to cool. Roll into balls or cones. Dip in egg and bread crumbs as usual and fry in deep fat. Serve with tomato sauce.

Stuffed Peppers.—Have as many green stuffed peppers as there will be guests. Cut a lid from the top of each, shave off the stem and smooth with a sharp knife. Extract the seeds and the tough membrane with a small knife having a sharp point. Then raise and drain. Stuff them with a forcemeat made as directed for croquettes in the above recipe, cover the top with bread crumbs and arrange in a baking pan with a dot of butter on each, and just enough butter to prevent burning and brown nicely. Serve with brown sauce.

DUMPLING DESSERTS.

To some young people this dessert is the chef d' oeuvre of the household repertoire. Either canned or stewed fruit is available, the juicier the better. Berries are especially good. If anyone has compunctions as to marring the perfection of raspberries or strawberries by stewing them, the hint may be preserved for huckleberries and blackberries, which are delicious as a compote.

Stew or, rather, simmer the berries until tender. When done add sugar enough to make them pleasantly sweet, but do not stir after adding this, as it would cause the sugar to candy. Keep them hot over a low flame and turn into the saucepan a dumpling made of milk, flour, sugar, one egg and baking powder. The proportions of the dumpling vary according to the size of the puree. For one of medium size begin with a cup of flour, to which stir in enough milk to form a thick batter. Add one egg, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, a generous teaspoonful of baking powder. Mix thoroughly and turn into the steaming puree. Cover closely and cook for twenty minutes without lifting the lid. To serve, reverse the skillet over the compote, when the dumpling will be underneath with the fruit under and around it. Or, in making it, the dumpling batter may be put in by the spoonful to form small dumplings. Canned peaches, cherries, etc, are nice in this way. When using them it is frequently necessary to add a little water to the juice from the can, as a good quantity of syrup is necessary to boil the dumplings.

How to Clean Furs.

To clean furs at home divide a pound of bran into two portions, putting one lot in the oven to get hot. Spread the fur on the table and rub it well over with the cold bran, then shake it out and brush the fur with a clean, soft brush. When the rest of the bran is hot rub it evenly into the fur in the same way as the cold, then shake the fur and free it from all bran and dust, and it will be found to be quite clean. White furs may be successfully cleaned by rubbing a little warm bran into the fur to take out the dirt, and then, by shaking the fur thoroughly in the open air. Another way of cleaning white fur is to place it on a table and rub it well with bran, which has been moistened with warm water. Rub it dry, then rub it with some dry bran, and lastly, with magnesia. The wet bran should be applied with a flannel, and for the dry process a fine muslin should be used. The fur must be thoroughly shaken afterwards. Flour is another excellent cleaning medium. It should be warmed and rubbed into the fur thoroughly, and be changed as it becomes soiled. Shake all the flour out at the end, so that no particle remains in the fur.

The cure was thorough and complete and we give all credit to Dr. Chase's Ointment."

MR. STRATTON'S REMARKS SUPPORTING MILLER BILL

Hansard's Report of the Speech of the Member for West Peterborough in the House on the Anti-Gambling Measure as Taken From Hansard.

Following are Hon. Mr. Stratton's remarks on the Miller Bill, before the House of Commons, as taken from Hansard:

Mr. J. R. Stratton (West Peterborough). I had intended last evening making a few observations, but on account of the abrupt way in which the debate closed, I did not feel it was desirable to detain the House at that time. This question has been before the country for a considerable time. I have listened to the speeches of those opposed to this measure; and giving these gentlemen all the credit for the ability they have displayed, which was very great, in my opinion they have been inconsistent in the arguments they put forward. When the hon. gentleman says that public opinion is not in favour of this Bill, I desire to take issue with him. When the hon. members for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) or West Northumberland Mr. McColl) pointed out that public opinion is not in favour of this Bill, I desire to dispute that statement; and I venture to say that my hon. friend who has just sat down (Mr. McLean) cannot name five newspapers in Ontario which are opposed to the principle of the Bill. On the other hand, I can name dozens which have urged the adoption of this measure, because it is in the right direction, and because great evils have grown up under the present law. My hon. friend from West Northumberland (Mr. McColl) referred to the thieves and other doubtful characters who attend the Toronto and similar exhibitions. Let me point out that the Attorney General of Ontario sends to such large gatherings detectives and others to protect the public. But if the amendment be adopted the very reverse will be the case. The hon. gentleman desires, as far as race-tracks are concerned, to legalize the very causes which attract thugs and thieves to the race-tracks and public exhibitions held from time to time. He referred to the fact that the book-maker, would be in the same class as the dangerous characters referred to as frequenting large gatherings, so far as access to large assemblages of the public would facilitate the opportunities of his plying his admittedly nefarious occupation. The opponents of the Bill, in the proposed amendment, seek to aid and, if it prevails, will legalize book-making on the race-course. It will license him, it will protect him, while the Bill proposes to do away with the book-maker, and thus protect those, unable from lack of knowledge or experience of the snares set for them, to protect themselves. Horse racing, as conducted in Ontario today, can be altered and improved, and a new method adopted by which horse-racing will not be interferred with, but the root of all the evil, the book-maker and book-making, will be abolished. I do not desire to interfere with racing, or the development of the thoroughbred, but I do not believe that it is at all necessary for that purpose to have book-makers on the race-track to rob the public, to contribute to the racing associations, and furnish the purses to be given on the pretext of developing the thoroughbred horse. I do not believe that is at all necessary and consequently I am opposed to any compromise that will have the effect of perpetuating book-making. New York state was referred to by my hon. friend from West Northumberland (Mr. McColl). He pointed to the conditions now existing there and the loss of prestige of the thoroughbred horse owing to the abolition of legalized gambling. Well, there may be a loss of prestige temporarily, there may be a diminution in the value of the thoroughbred as a racer, but there is no reduction in the actual value of the thoroughbred, that I know of, in the state of New York at present. It is not often we look across the line for precedents, but, if we should do so in this case, we would find that the state of New York is not thinking of abolishing their law, but of amending and improving it, so as to make it even more effective than it originally was.

During the Easter vacation I was in New York and took occasion to ask—not the goody goody people, as they are sometimes termed—but men of business whom I met in the financial world—I took occasion to ask them as to he result of the operation of the Hughes law. I asked them was it the goody-goody people that were particularly responsible for the passage of that act. I was informed to the contrary, that o fcourse their moral support was with the Bill, but that the business houses and financial institutions that gave their support most earnestly to the Hughes law were those whose influence was behind its adoption: and it was further stated that those who were previously giving their attention to the race-track and losing their money, were now paying their debts, butchers' bills and rents more promptly than they ever did before. If that be the case across the border I think these conditions could be imitated on this side of the line to advantage.

My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) went on to make a comparison between gambling at the race-track and betting on an election. I do not think there is any comparison between the two. If a man desires to make an innocent bet, on the result of an election to show his faith in the candidate of his party, he has all the previous conditions surrounding the candidate to guide him. He is not held up by the book-maker, but banks on his own judgment, founded on his knowledge of the popularity of the candidates, and the local conditions.

If he desires to bet upon that question he is backing up his political faith. Also, he has an opportunity of judging the merits of the candidates and of the questions and issues before the people. Making an ordinary bet, he makes it under conditions entirely different from those which face the average citizen who goes to the race-track and makes his bet with the book-maker, for that average citizen has but little chance of winning. The hon. member compared the making of a bet with a book-maker and the purchase of stock with a stock-broker. I think there is no comparison whatever. If a man goes into a broker's office and buys stock, he gets what he pays for. He may be mistaken in his judgment as to the value of the stock, or he may buy more than he is able to take care of. But it is only when he fails to pay his debts that the wrong comes in or an injury is done to any other person. The hon. member also referred to life insurance. Again, I say, there is no comparison, whatever. The man who takes out life insurance gets what he pays for. The amount is paid to his heirs at his death or to himself at the maturing of the policy, as the case may be. In either case, he has paid for what he gets, and he gets no more than he has paid for. It is true, as one hon. member said early in the debate, that there is more or less of a chance in any business occupation upon which a man may enter. If a man takes up the dry goods business he may make a mistake in the quantity, quality or selection of the goods he buys. But in every business a man has an opportunity to exercise his own judgment and in making a purchase, he gets what he pays for. Not so when he deals with a book-maker on the race-track.

My hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Sifton) spoke of what he called the peculiar method adopted for the promotion of social reform as evidenced in this Bill. The hon. member quite approved of the action of parliament in passing the Lord's Day Bill of a few years ago. But I would ask him to point out any single difference of principle between that measure and this. One is in the interest of the public, and so is the other, and if the Lord's Day Bill is right, there is no doubt, in my opinion, that the present Bill is right also. The hon. member (Mr. Sifton) spoke of the thoroughbred horse and its importance to the farmer, and he also mentioned, if I remember aright, the Ottawa Association as one that had afforded the farmers in the neighbourhood special opportunities for the improvement of their stock by the use of the thoroughbred horse. We know that the farmer does not use the thoroughbred horse to any great extent, and, if what the hon. member says concerning the Ottawa association be correct—and, of course, I fully accept what he says on that subject—it only shows a desire to create in the farmer's mind an impression that the thoroughbred horse can be useful to him. The hon. member for Brandon also said that confiscation of property was involved in the passing of this measure. If there be a confiscation of property in the difference between 10 per cent. and 10,000 per cent. on the stock of these racing associations, then there may be an appearance of confiscation. But I contend that there is no real confiscation of property by the adoption of this measure. While there may be a depreciation to some extent in the value of a few of the thoroughbred horses throughout the country, there is no other confiscation that can be entertained. This parliament, or any legislature, does not hesitate for a moment to amend the law affecting any business, but bases its legislation simply upon considerations of the public interest. And nothing is said against it so doing. If the parliament of Canada can reduce to a minimum the evil of book-making from one end of this country to the other by the adoption of this measure, I believe it will be doing something that will be in the right direction, something for which it will have every reason to expect the approval of the overwhelming majority of the people.

My hon. friend from West Northumberland (Mr. McColl) has proposed an amendment, the effect of which would be to legalize race-track gambling in its entirety. He would give to race-track associations a monopoly or the betting on horse-racing in this country. And, while my hon. friend from South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) is willing to extend the privileges to those who are able to attend the race-meets of the Ontario Jockey Club in Toronto, yet his regard for liberty of action and of speech is not sufficient to cause him to extend this privilege to others who may not be able to attend the race-track. He would confine the privilege to the favoured few who occupy the position and can wear the good clothes necessary to attend the meets of the jockey club, but his attitude is entirely inconsistent in that he desires to take away from the great public the advantages—if they be advantages—of making bets with professional book-makers off the race-track. But in this amendment there would be enormous and manifest advantages to the proprietors of these race-tracks. If this amendment is to be adopted, and there is to be no compromise whatever upon that line, I say the five associations of the province of Ontario should pay to some authority, for the privilege they would enjoy—for the monopoly they enjoy—at least $100,000 per annum. That would be a small license fee indeed for the monopoly of book-making. That $100,000 could be devoted to the development of the Clyde, the Percheron, the Hackney, the French horse, of any of the other breeds of horses that, as the evidence before the committee went to show, would serve a far more useful purpose to this country than the thoroughbred horse. I do not desire to take up time in considering the value of the thoroughbred horse to this country. But, while I do not underestimate the value of the thoroughbred, I do say that the evidence before the committee showed that a great majority of those who gave evidence on this subject believed that the thoroughbred horse was not the horse that the farmer desired to have developed, but that they were favourable to other classes of horses that I have just mentioned.

The hon. member for West Northumberland (Mr. McColl) is willing to prohibit all the evils which the Bill is designed to prohibit, because he accepts and adopts the principle of the Bill by admitting the evils that are known to exist; he is willing to see them abolished, but he is at the same time willing that the root of all the evils on the race-track itself shall be retained by giving racing associations the privileges allowed by the proposed amendment. While the Bill of my hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller) aims to make the race-track betting a criminal offence, there must be some way of giving effect, and if there is any other means by which the same results can be effected without making it a criminal offence, then I am perfectly satisfied that such a course should be adopted. But I do not think it is possible for this parliament to allow the conditions to continue that have existed for years throughout this country without giving some relief to the people. There is a strong feeling in favour of this Bill. The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) may desire to minimize that feeling. I think I have as good opportunities for gathering the state of public opinion as any one, and I think that seventy-five per cent. of the people of Canada are in favour of this Bill. If a vote were polled today in the province of Ontario, eighty per cent. of the people would vote for the principle of this Bill, that is, the abrogation of book-making and race-track gambling; and I think that the other clauses of the Bill are also necessary. My hon. friend, in his amendment, desires to make it a crime upon the street or in any other place where book-making may be carried on; but where the lambs are all gathered together, where the public are assembled, there he is willing to see them fleeced. He is willing to allow the bookmaker to have his privilege, and the racing association have their advantages and to be taken care of, as we know they have been taken care of, speaking sarcastically, in the past. We do know that if the privileges are given to the racing association that the amendment proposes to give them, instead of book-makers contributing to the racing association $150 a day, they will be asked to contribute over $200, because the advantages of the association would be so great that they from the monopoly provided in the amendment would forego the opportunity. If I am not incorrectly informed, the associations had intended before this legislation was proposed in the very near future, perhaps this season, to increase the price of privileges to the bookmakers. The amendment recognizes all the evils that the promoters of the Bill have pointed out, and they are willing that these evils shall be wiped away. So far so good. But if I understand the Bill and the shape the amendment has taken in the last clause, it is an amendment to wipe out all the advantages that the Bill would otherwise confer. For example, clause 2 says that the prohibition shall not extend to bets between individuals. Is not a bookmaker an individual? Of course he is, and betting would go to the same extent as it would under the present measure.

Mr. McColl. The promoters of the Bill empahtically state that it is not meant to prohibit private betting, which I understand to be bets between individuals. In other words, a man who had a reputation as a book-maker in the United States could come here and start operations as a private individual. How are are you going to make a distinction?

Mr. Stratton. Under the Bill of my hon. friend from South Grey, he would not be able to carry on private betting to any considerable extent, but if this amendment is adopted it is sufficiently wide to enable bookmakers to do all the business they desire to do. I think that would be found to be the case, and that they would be able to drive a coach and four through this Bill, as they have done in the case of other legislation. Again the amendment says:

"Any constale may take into custody, without warrant, any person found committing an offence under this section, and may seize and detain any article liable to be forfeited under this Act."

Yo umight as well change the act and have it read in such a way as to say that any constable on the Kingston road make take into custody today, without warrant, any person, because if the person is carrying on betting outside, then he can be taken and carried up unceremoniously to prison. That is what my hon. friend advocated a moment ago. But if the individual is inside the track, if he has the advantage of the law so that he may get inside the racing inclosure, then he is free and is at liberty to carry on betting to the fullest extent. I am absolutely opposed to the amendment. I think it kills the principle of the Bill, and I think the desire of the House is that we should adopt the principle of the Bill. I think it is the duty of this parliament to afford the people the protection to which they are entitled. We are not interfering with the rights of anybody further than is necessary in the public interest, even though the Bill went to the fullest extent desired by its most ardent supporters. I believe it should be adopted, and that by doing so we would be meeting the wishes of the vast majority of the people of Canada. I can not say whether the Bill has been advocated by the Lord's Day Alliance, or by certain clergymen, or whether petitions have been sent in. We do know that this House was flooded with petitions at the commencement of the session. We are all able to judge of their value. But for us to say that there is no public sentiment in favour of the Bill is a mistake, and any hon. gentleman will deceive himself if he goes away with that opinoin. There is a strong public sentiment in favour of it, there is a strong feeling throughout the country that something should be done to protect the innocent, to protect those who are unable to protect themselves. I will not quote to you the remarks of clergymen with regard to gambling upon the race track; but I think that one of the most powerful sermons ever delivered against race track gambling was the opinion expressed by the famous Silent Smith who died in Pittsburg a year or two ago, and who had accumualted about $3,000,000 in gambling. This is what he said on his death bed:

Race-track gambling is as insidious as the most powerful drug, gradually developing as if the victim was not strong enough to resist the temptation. Few people have the ability to be successful on the track. The best evidence he could give of that was that he could count on the fingers of one hand those men who, in the past century, had made money out of race-track gambling.

He said further that:

He would welcome the laws that would prevent the youth of the land spending money and energy in following the ponies.

So we have from one who followed the race track, for years who knew what the advantages, and disadvantages of it were, and who made large sums of money for himself in connection therewith, this dying statement. This parliament has a duty to perform in the interest of the youth of the land, and that is to adopt legislation which will guard them in connection with race-track betting. One of the greatest horse figures in the United States — Keene, who spends more money upon his race stables than perhaps any other man in the world, over half a million a year, made a statement upon this subject, and what did he say? Betting is not necessary to horse-racing and that he had never placed a bet on a horse. The Agnew Bill in the State of New York is being backed up by the public sentiment of the state, and the opposition to this Bill which has only developed is being worked up by those who are particularly interested in opposing that legislation, just as an effort is being made to create a feeling around this building hostile to this measure, because it is claimed that it will interfere with the development of the thoroughbred horse. I do not believe anything of the kind. I believe that the thoroughbred horse will be fostered just as successfully in the future as he has been in the past because the evidence that came before the committee showed conclusively that development had not been as rapid as could have been desired especially in view of the alleged benefits of fifty years racing in Canada, and evidence of which was the fact that when the Boer war broke out they could not obtain in Canada the quality and quantity of horses that the British army required. For my part, I am in favour of the measure now before the House, and I hope that the parliament of Canada will see its way to place upon the statute-book a law that will give protection to our citizens, and that protection which is absolutely essential. If other countries can adopt legislation such as this, the parliament of Canada should meet the wishes of the people in so far as this measure goes, and I believe that by adopting this Bill it will be meeting the wishes of the people.

WOMAN CHARGED WITH BLAGKMAIL

Was a Woman of Mystery, Who Had Lived a Gay Life on the Boulevards

Paris, April 9.—The fascinating and mysterious young woman, known in Paris as "Peaches and Cream," who caused a sensation in New York as Nellie Roselle, when she was barred by the immigration authorities, is in jail here, charged with blackmail.

She was not allowed to enter the United States last September, despite the fact that she carried $4,000 in her pockets, and that Jacques Mallett, son of a rich Paris banker, who was in New York at the time, gave assurances that the girl "would not become dependent." They returned to France on the same ship.

The real name of the beautiful enigma, whose escapades have landed her behind prison bars, is Louise Mathot. She is known to all the Boulevardiers, to the police and to the throngs that frequent that "Lobster Palace."

Soon after her return from New York Nellie Roselle visited Jacques Mallett's widowed mother, Mme. Theodore Mallett, who, being wealthy, consented to pay a large sum to free her son from the woman's clutches.

Later "Peaches and Cream" ran short of the funds necessary to maintain life in the gayest quarters of Paris, so she sought another interview with Mme. Mallett, and made violent and ugly accusations against Jacques. When money was refused she threatened to make her charges public. It is said she persistently black-mailed Mallett, who finally caused her arrest(

PETERBOROUGH TO BE A DIVISIONAL POINT?

Does Action of C. P. R. in Securing Options on Property Along West Bank of the River Indicate That Such a Step is in Contemplation?

Does the action of the Canadian Pacific Railway in securing options on the property along the west bank of the river, north of their main line indicate that the C. P. R. proposes to make Peterborough a divisional point for the new short grain line, which the Company is building, and which will tap the main line, near here?

The surmise has been made by a number of people who have heard of the action of the company, and although the local officials refuse to discuss the matter it might be that there is something in the opinion advanced. At all events, during the past few days the C. P. R. has been busy getting options on the property spoken of and improvements of some kind are undoubtedly contemplated although just what form they will take is by no means certain just now.

THE T. A. S. BUILDING IS NOW NEARING COMPLETION

Will be Opened on April 27 and 28 With an Excellent Programme---Miss Margaret McCann, Famous Australian Singer, Will Take Part.

The repairs on the new T. A. S. building, Simcoe St., recently purchased by that society, are rapidly nearing completion. The plate glass windows of the first storey have been replaced by a beautiful red pressed brick front with Indiana sand stone trimmings, which has added greatly to the beauty of its appearance. The ground floor will be used for an assembly hall, with a well equipped stage and dressing room accommodation. It will conveniently seat 500 persons, is well ventilated and artistically decorated.

The whole building has been renovated and repainted so as to give one the impression of an entirely new construction. The electric wiring has been carefully done and provision made for an ample supply of light. A new steam furnace has been installed and two large bath rooms added, all of which make a thoroughly convenient and modern building, which will furnish ample room for the Catholic Societies of the city.

The formal opening will take place on the evening of the 27th and 28th of this month. An excellent programme has been arranged, a prominent feature of which will be the first appearance in Peterborough of Miss Margaret McCann, the celebrated Australian songstress, who is to-day in the front rank of the interpreters of Irish and Scotch song. Since leaving Melbourne Miss McCann has met with marked success. Whilst in England she made a number of successful appearances, notably in the Queen's Hall, and at the Scottish Clan's Association concert in London, at the City Corporation's concert in Edinburgh, Scotland; at the Gaelic Society's concert, New York; Clan McDonald concert, Brooklyn; Hallowe'en concert, Montreal; New York Fiestined, Boston; as well as at concerts in Toronto, Ottawa, Fort William, and all through Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia.

The New York Daily News says of Miss McCann:

A feature of the Emmet celebration at the Brooklyn Grand Opera House was the appearance of the famous Australian soprano, Miss Mrguret McCann, who was introduced by the chirman, David Healy, as a singer of international renown, who came all the way from the Antipodes to pay respectful homage to the memory of Emmet." Miss McCann received a welcome from the great aupdience which has seldom or never been equalled in the case of any other stranger. The building fairly shook with applause as she was escorted to the platform by Mr. Healy.

Miss McCann is a beautiful woman, with a gracious manner, a graceful carriage and great personl magnetism. But the beauty of her voice is the greatest of all. It has a golden warmth, a limpid crystal purity and a sympathetic quality which is lacking in many great artists. Her vocal method is the perfetcion of art. She has an exquisite tone production, perfect command of sustaining power, even to the vanishing point of tone, and her phrasig is artistic and finished in every detail.

Assassination And Shooting Down Of Two Fellow Churchmen

Pittsburg, Pa., April 10.—A sermon on martyrdom, in which Frank Skala, an editor and prominent mission worker, had declared himself willing to lay down his life for the Christian cause, was followed to-day by his assassination and the shooting down also of a fellow-church leader, John Guy.

Arm in arm, the two missionaries were leaving the little Congregational church in Woods Run, a suburb, at the head of more than a hundred foreigners. A raggedly-dressed and collarless man poked his way through the crowd as it reached the corner of Eckert street and McClure Ave., and when he was but a step behind the leaders he pressed a revolver to Skala's head and fired twice. The bullets took effect in the jaw and temple, and in the midst of his followers Skala fell dead.

Guy, who threw up his right hand to ward off the weapon, was hit first on the thumb and then a second bullet was buried in his head. He fell unconscious across the lifeless body of his colleague.

For a moment the assassin stood over his victims, flourishing his revolver, while the panic-stricken crowd fled to shelter behind posts and doorways. Then, stamping his foot on the bodies, the murderer made off down the avenue to the Fort Wayne tracks and was soon lost to view. A large armed posse of police, detectives and church people was soon in pursuit, but up to a late hour to-night they had found no trace of him.

The slayer was John Radovitch, a character known to most of the missionaries for his radical opinions. A moment before he had meekly read from juvenile leaflets in the Sunday school, led by Skala; previously he had sat in a back pew of the church during the regular sermon, and at the beginning of the service Skala had shaken his hand. In all this Radovitch had given no warning of his murderous intent.

None of the church-workers believe that there was any method in Radovitch's madness. It is doubtful if he had ever seen Skala before today. He is said to have been detained once at a hospital for examination into his mental condition, but was released after a brief time.

It is believed by some of the congregation that the sermon Skala preached, with the emphatic declaration that "any moment God would want my life I am ready to lay my life down," stirred the probably insane man to test his Christian fidelity.

Killed By A Blow In Schoolboy Fight

Special to The Examiner:

Passaic, N.J., April 8.—Gilbert Trehou died here to-night from a solar plexus blow received in a boy's prize fight last Tuesday night. With brief intermissions, he had been unconscious since he was lifted out of the ring and carried to the hospital.

Frank Kieser, who is named in a warrant as the other principal, is missing, and the police hear he has fled to Canada.

Henry Knackstedt, superintendent of a Presbyterian Sunday school here, said to have been the referee, was arrested yesterday and released in $5000 bail.

Trehou and Keiser were both nineteen, both pupils of the Passaic high school, and both of good family. Reports of their quarrel differ, but it is understood that there had been bad blood between them for some time over a girl and that on Easter Sunday they agred to settle their differences with the gloves. Both went into training, and last Monday declared themselves fit. Word was passed about among their friends and Tuesday night, a small crowd met in a vacant lot behind an oil tank and squared off the ring. Lanterns were hung on the ropes, seconds were chosen, and a timekeeper and referee named. The hat was passed for a purse to the winner and the collection given a stakeholder.

According to accounts of eye-witnesses, in the seventh and fatal round Keiser caught Trehou flush on the jaw with a heavy swing. Trehou staggered, and, before he got his feet again, Keiser shot in a body punch.

RUNAWAY THIS MORNING

A runaway occurred this morning which might have ended in greater damages. T. E. Chapman, owner of the "Smith Dairy," was delivering milk to a house on McDonnel street, and left his horse untied, near the corner of Aylmer and McDonnel Sts. The horse heard the noise of the G. T. R. train on Bethune street, and was soon running wildly down McDonnel street, towards the G. T. R. track. As it crossed the track the milk waggon was struck by the engine and greatly damaged. The horse escaped injury, save for a few bruises. The remains of the waggon are now in Mr. J. Shadgett's hospital of vehicles.

THRIFT AND SAVING.

It is the small savings of the people, indicating habits of thrift and economy that constitute the real financial strength of a nation, not immense accumulation of money amassed by a few men or corporations, at the expense of somebody else and not the result of productive toil. It is the habit of thrift that makes France one of the strongest financial countries in the world. The French peasantry, working classes and small merchants are distinguished by their thrift and their "economies." The national importance of this national condition was demonstrated in the Franco-Prussian war. Germany imposed upon France an immense war indemnity. This was speedily paid off, principally by loans subscribed at home, contributed by the savings of the whole people. Other countries with a less thrifty people would have had recourse to foreign money lenders, and a similar or even lesser war indemnity, instead of being speedily paid off, as in the case of France, would have been a burdensome debt for years. Though our School Board authorities in Peterborough do not see the value of school savings banks as necessary to inculcate habits of thrift in our children from their earliest school age; laying the basis of character, the most important possible in regard to material success in a country, yet it is evident that we are improving. Sir Richard Cartwright's old age annuities scheme is gradually gaining ground and teaching our people that small weekly savings invested with the government, will bring a living pension when old age and the years of inactivity come on and prevent the investor from facing an old age of want or pauperism. The post office savings bank seems also to be growing in favour. In 1885 the people's deposits in the post office savings bank amounted to $23,011,422; ten years later, in 1899, the amount had grown to $34,771,605; in 1909, the amount to the credit of the depositors in government savings banks was, $45,190,484, practically an increase of 100 per cent. in twenty years. This increase is either due to increased general prosperity or general increase of habits of thrift. In either case it is satisfactory, but more especially if the latter is the cause. Natural habits of thrift are a permanent asset, while general prosperity may be intermittent and not permanent, as past experience shows.

EXPLODED SCANDALS.

Mr. Haughton Lennox, of South Simcoe, has constituted himself this session the sole reviver of the scandal session of 1908. He and his associates upon the special committee appointed to investigate the Lumsden charges have confessed failure to fix a scandal in regard to these charges. At the very first sitting of the committee he and they discovered that the ground for the establishment of a scandal against the government was cut from under them by Mr. Lumsden, himself, who stated that he charged none of the engineers in whom he professed to have lost faith on account of improper classification of material in Transcontinental railway excavation—who had certified to more rock excavation than was justified—with wrongful conduct, only error in judgment. Seeing that the prosecution of the investigation promised a small return in the way of party capital, Mr. Lennox devised a way to throw the whole investigation into the hands of the four Liberal members of the special committee, and permit the raising of the cry that the Lumsden charges had been made the subject of a partizan, whitewashing, investigation. To effect this he and his party friends on the committee made an impossible and unprecedented demand. They demanded that the Conservative minority of the committee—it was composed of four Liberals and three Conservatives—should be allowed to name a solicitor, to "act for the people" in the investigation. This modest demand, contrary to all precedent, and in opposition to the principle of majority rule, being declined, the Conservative members of the committee rebelled, deserted their posts, and shirked their responsibility, by playing the baby act and refusing to serve unless they could have their own way. They claimed that unless "the people" were represented by a partizan lawyer, opposed to the government, they would not serve. Their demand for a partizan counsel, aside from being unprecedented and impracticable, is weakened by the fact that all three of the deserters—the three Conservative members of the committee are lawyers, who would no doubt, be justly offended, if one did not describe them as eminent and able lawyers. Instead of refusing to act, because they could not have their own childish way, they should have stood by their guns and done their best to see that, according to their view, a full and impartial investigation was made. They would have done so if they had been sincere in their solicitude for the public interest. At the least they would have been on hand to detect and expose if, in their view they could not prevent, any stifling of inquiry, which they assert, was the object of the Liberal members of the committee. If they believed that, they basely deserted their post and left the "enemy" free to work his will. In face of this attitude and the action of the Conservative members of the committee, the remaining members are continuing the investigation, and doing their utmost to arrive at the truth. Whatever the report they make, and especially if it does not condemn somebody to be hanged, drawn and quartered, Mr. Lennox and his party friends will split the welkin with denunciation of the partizan and whitewashing investigation, which they have done their best to invest with a partizan character.

Mr. Lennox fathered another, now exploded scandal. He brought up in the House with a great flourish of trumpets a charge that the Government, Mr. Dickson, government valuator, and Mr. L. F. Clarry, solicitor, Hastings, had been in collusion in respect to improper manipulation of claims to compensation in respect of lands alleged to be damaged by flooding on the line of the Trent waterway; that while Mr. Clarry was acting for the claimants he was at the same time acting for the Government in investigating titles. On Mr. Lennox making his charges in the House, Hon. Mr. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals, explained that Mr. Clarry was not employed by his department but by the Department of Justice, to investigate titles of persons to whom the valuator had awarded damages, and he added that he would at once investigate the matter. He did so, sending a Commissioner to Peterborough, who examined, on oath, all the parties concerned, and reported that there had been no collusion between Mr. Dickson and Mr. Clarry and the Government, but that matters had been regularly conducted. Meantime Mr. Lennox had brought up the matter in the Public Accounts Committee. Mr. Clarry, Mr. Dickson, Mr. McClellan, superintendent, and several of the claimants for damages, were examined on oath. It was brought out that both Mr. Dickson and Mr. Clarry had acted independently—there was no collusion. The claimants said they had no fault to find with Mr. Clarry's charges; they only paid what they had voluntarily agreed to pay. And most important of all, it was shown in evidence that after the damages had been fixed by the valuator and not till then had Mr. Clarry been engaged to investigate the titles of the claimants.

Thus two promising scandals have come to naught. It is hardly worth while giving so much attention to them, but it will be well to remember the facts; for history will repeat itself, and, hereafter, as has been done in the past, exploded scandals will be pressed into service and made to do campaign duty.

WHOLESOME MEATS AND COMPENSATION.

In the House of Commons on April 5th the honourable, the Minister of Agriculture, introduced a bill to amend "The Meat and Canned Fruits Act." In the course of the inevitable discussion, Mr. J. D. Reid, Grenville, based his criticism on the fact that the Dominion government protected by inspection of meats entered for ex by inspection meats entered for exconsumption were not guaranteed as to wholesome character by Government inspection. Hon. Mr. Fisher, Minister of Agriculture, explained that the matter of slaughtering animals for home consumption was within the jurisdiction of the provincial government and the municipalities, while the Dominion government have authority only in respect of export and interprovincial trade. It seems an injustice that foreigners or Canadians in other provinces than that from which meat is sent should be protected by effective Dominion government inspection, while the meat consumed at home may be diseased and unfit for human food. But it is not the fault of the Dominion government. The local governments, particularly that of Ontario, are very sensitive in regard to encroachment on provincial rights, but they are quite willing at times to relegate responsibility to the central government to cover their neglect of duty.

If, in Peterborough or elsewhere, there exists, as actually there does exist, conditions that provide for the expert inspection of meats intended for export and that permit the offering of diseased meats for local consumption, it is the fault of the provincial or municipal authorities, which neglect to provide for proper or, indeed any form of inspection of meats for local consumption.

During the debate an interesting discussion took place in regard to compensation for meats destroyed as a result of inspection and condemnation of meats found to be diseased. The Minister of Agriculture pointed out that in the case of the living animal found to be diseased for which when ordered to be killed, the government gives compensation, the owner may claim that the animal can be cured, and the value not lost, but the government thinks the risk of the spread of the disease is too great and in the public interest the animal is killed and compensation made. This is done, and has been done with good effect in the cases of glanders in horses, tuberculosis in cattle and hog cholera, the result being to practically stamp out these diseases.

The Dominion is charged with the responsibility of safeguarding the quality of Canadian meats for export, a matter in which the good name of Canada and trade interests are involved, and it provides for inspection of meats for export, but the meats for local supply and consumption are matters of domestic and municipal concern and impose a duty upon provincial and municipal governments. It is therefore incongruous and unjust that our own kin, foreigners living thousands of miles away using Canadian meats are protected by government solicitude and care, while the meats that we use here every day have no similar guarantee of freedom from disease and consequently wholesomeness; and it becomes befitting to demand from our provincial authorities a system of inspection and protection, which is difficult of application except in connection with municipal abattoirs, when all meats for local consumption are provided by slaughtering. This is something that is self-evidently called for in the interests of the public health.

But, aside from the apartly of the provincial and municipal authorities, the chief obstacle to the adoption of such methods, is the cost which will come, if the compensation is to be made for animals condemned as unfit for food. In the matters of condemned meats for local consumption the Federal government makes no provision for compensation nor in the matter of meats slaughtered for export—it only makes compensation in the case where animals are destroyed to prevent the spread of disease. But certainly packers should not be made to suffer the loss as they have to do now; a diseased animal, one of a batch of perhaps a thousand, cannot be traced to the original producer, and the packer has to suffer the loss. To provide against loss the price of meats to the consumer may very reasonably be advanced, so that ultimately the innocent public has indirectly to pay the compensation. In this case government interference is suggested. The authority that causes destruction of meat through inspection might reasonably be regarded as the party justly liable for compensation. The inspection is made in the interests of the good name of Canadian meat products, but the unfortunate packer who buys an animal in good faith should not be condemned as he now is to bear the entire loss. There are difficulties in the way but greater difficulties have been overcome. It is indispensable that we provide for having wholesome meats, but it is unjust that individual loss should be inflicted in the interests of a national benefit.

KILLED A BURGLAR

Desperate Struggle in Backyard in the Early Morning.

Philadelphia, Pa., April 10.—James Galagher, a notorious burglar with a long prison record, was killed with a club this morning, after a desperate struggle, by a householder whose home he had attempted to enter.

Samuel Zeaquinian, of 2431 North 23rd street, was awakened shortly after midnight by his wife, who said a man was trying to get into a neighbouring house. Looking out, Zeanquinian saw the man in a yard several doors away. Hastily dressing, he went to his cellar and picked up a long heavy club used as a lever in a wine press. By this time the intruder, failing to effect an entrance in the other house, had appeared at Zeanquinian's cellar window. Runing into his backyard. Zeaquinian spraing at the stranger and a desperate struggle ensued. The burglar managed to secure possession of the club, but before he could use it Zeanquinian closed in on him and recovered it.

The burglar then ran to the street followed by Zeanquinian, who struck Gallagher with such force that he was thrown against a lamppost and smashed the lamp. The burglar managed to crawl on his hands and knees about a block from the scene of the encounter. There he was found lying unconscious with a fractured skull and removed to a hospital. He died shortly afterward.

UNCIE WALT---THE POET PHILOSOPHER

THE TURNING WORM

Mary had a little hat, which hit her father hard; and when she went into a house, she left it in the yard. She wore it to a theatre, which was a dirty shame; for no one else could see the stage when little Mary came. And so the usher got a hook and tied it to a mop, and climbed upon a fire escape and tried to reach the top. He vainly poked and reached and stretched, and climbed and clumb and clim, but could not reach across the vast expansive purple rim. And still the hat shed gobs of gloom upon the festive scene; men simply could not see the show behind the gauzy screen. "Why does she wear an acre lot, upon her empty head? Why not pare off a rod or two?" the angry people said. Then up spake Mary to the crowd, and thus she proudly cried: "I wear this on my head because I've nothing much inside."

MOUNTAINS SWEPT INTO THE SEA

"We Will Not Fear Though the Mountains Be Carried Into the Midst of the Sea" (Psalm xlvi, 2).

April 10.—Pastor Russell, accompanied by Dr Jones, who will serve him as stenographer, and by a representative of this Journal, sailed from New York April 5th for Jerusalem—via Paris, Berne, Naples, Alexandria, Cairo and the Pyramids, Jaffa, to Jerusalem and vicinity. His return will be via Rome, Vienna, Warsaw, Berlin, Elberfeld and London. Meetings have been arranged for en route. His longest stay will be in Great Britain, where about twenty appointments in the principal cities await him. He will be speaking practically every day. His Sunday discourses will be specially reported in these columns. Special interest will centre in the discourses at Jerusalem and Rome. The many readers of his sermons will follow the Pastor in his journey with great interest. He is scheduled to be back in Brooklyn June 5th, when his topic will be "Jerusalem." In anticipation of a large audience on that occasion Brooklyn's largest Auditorium, the Academy of Music, has been secured. His sermons now reach six million families weekly, and assuredly many of these wish him God-speed.

I have chosen for my text a sea topic, a symbolical prophecy which, I believe, is rapidly nearing fulfillment. All Bible students recognize the fact that many of the Psalms are Messianic; that is to say, they apply to the time of the inauguration of Messiah's Millennial Kingdom. Some of them detail the peace and joy and blessings which will then prevail amongst men, when the great levelling processes of that time will raise all the worthy poor and degraded and will humble all the proud, establishing Society under such new conditions that the new order of things is symbolically styled in the Scriptures "a new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (II. Peter iii, 13). Others of the Psalms describe in highly figurative terms the work of the Millennial Age. For instance, we read:

"Gird thy sword upon thy thigh, O most Mighty, with thy glory and thy majesty. And in thy majesty ride prosperously, because of truth and meekness and righteousness; and thy right hand shall teach thee terrible things. Thine arrows are sharp in the heart of the King's enemies; whereby the people fall under thee" (Psalm xlv, 3-5). Here the great Redeemer is pictured as the glorious conquering King of the Millennial Age, and his victory over every opposing influence is emphasized—"Unto him every knee shall bow and every tongue confess" (Isaiah xlv, 23). His right hand that will teach terrible things is the symbol of the Divine power which will be exercised at the inauguration of the Kingdom. The sharp arrows which will pierce the enemies to the heart and cause them symbolically to fall before him slain represent his messages of Truth and Grace which then will conquer as they do not now, except in the hearts of the few. A sample of those now slain after this manner by the Word of Truth is furnished us in the account of St. Peter's sermon on the Day of Pentecost. He preached the Truth plainly, thrusting in the "Sword of the Spirit" up to the hilt. He told his hearers how they and their rulers had crucified the Prince of Life. They were "cut to the heart," and it was the greatest blessing that could have possibly come to them (Acts ii, 23). Similarly during the Millennium, the "arrows" of Truth will smite down all opposition, and mankind, cut to the heart with proper appreciation of their own sinfulness and God's mercy, will fall before the great King, accepting mercy upon His gracious terms—full surrender.

The Psalm of which our text is a part is one of the Messianic Psalms. Prophetically and symbolically it tells about the trouble incident to the passing away of the present order of sin and selfishness and the inauguration of the new order of righteousness and love under the great Mediatorial Kingdom of Christ. Whether the events which the Scriptures predict shall come in our day or not, we hold that they will come and be in full comportment with these prophetic pictures. They were surely written for our instruction (II. Timothy iii, 16). And as Bible students we do well to take heed to every item of the Divine revelation, that thus we may keep ourselves in touch with the Infinite One and in sympathy with all the features of his great and wonderful Program. Let us note the particulars of the Psalm in detail.

"God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble" (Psalm xlvi, 1). How beautiful! How comforting! How strengthening! Those who have entered into covenant relationship with God through Christ, through faith and consecration, and who are abiding in his love, may feel serene in any trouble—in every trouble—not merely in the final trouble, with which sin and sorrow will be brought to an end. Not merely when Satan shall be bound will God be the refuge of his saints, but in all times and under all circumstances "the peace of God which passeth all understanding" will keep the hearts and minds of his faithful.

"Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea." Fear is the great torment of the majority of our race. It is the lash which the Adversary frequently uses to drive away from God those who need his sympathy and love and succor. To such the Lord speaks tenderly saying, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." And again, God declares his name to be Love and says, "Their fear toward me is taught by the precepts of men"—not by his Word (Isaiah xxix, 13). He would have us trust him as a great, loving, generous Father, saying, "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord compassioneth those who reverence him" (Psalm ciii, 13). As love, more love, perfect love, comes into our hearts it more and more casts out the fear which the Adversary would inculcate and which has burned into men's minds and consciences the "doctrines of devils," to which the Apostle refers (I. Timothy iv, 1).

"Fear not their fear, neither be afraid," says the Lord to those who are his people. "Let the peace of God which passeth all understanding rule in your hearts!" Be faithful! Be trustful! Accept the assurance that "All things shall work together for good to those who love God—to the called ones according to his purpose" (Romans viii, 28). This class will not fear when the earth shall be removed and when the mountains shall be carried into the midst of the sea. They might indeed be astonished and in trepidation if these were literal mountains; but they are symbolical. The people of the Lord, under his instruction, will not be in darkness that that day shall overtake them as a thief, although it will come as a thief and as a snare upon the whole world (Luke xxi, 35). In the symbology of the Bible the term earth is used to represent the social structure, as the mountains which constitute the backbone of the earth symbolize the kingdoms of the world supported by the social order. As the earth represents the fixity of the social order, the sea represents the restless, turbulent, dissatisfied classes which lash against the earth and continually seek to swallow it up. The removal of the earth symbolizes the disturbance of the social order. The swallowing up of the mountains in the seas represents the overwhelming of some of the great kingdoms of the earth by the uprising of the people in anarchistic rebellion against social order.

The fact that the Scriptures prophetically describe the overwhelming of the social order and the great governments of the earth must not be understood to signify that the Bible counsels revolution or anarchy. On the contrary, all of God's people throughout the Scriptures are counseled to live peaceably with all men, so far as possible. They are counseled not to use carnal weapons, not to take to the sword for the settlement of disputes, but rather to suffer injury. They are counseled that God is the great Over-Lord, and that although he is not now ruling directly amongst men he is fully the Master of the situation in that he could at any time overthrow all opponents. He does not acknowledge that his will is now done in the earth, but tells us that it will be done by and by and encourages us to pray and to hope and to wait for it. He tell us that Satan is now the "Prince of this world" by virtue of the fact that he deceives the minds and hearts of the majority. God would have his people understand something of his great Program, but he would keep this hidden from all others; hence the impossibility of explaining spiritual things to a carnal mind (I. Corinthians ii, 14). "None of the wicked shall understand" (Daniel xii, 10).

The great Creator has contented himself with such a supervision of human affairs as leaves much responsibility in human hands. He merely interferes to raise up or to cast down on occasions when the interest of his Cause and Program may demand. For instance, the case of the Pharaoh, raised to the throne of Egypt, in Moses' day. God there raised to the Throne a man of great determination, and hindered from reaching the throne other men not so favorable to the carrying out of the Divine Purposes. Thus, without interfering with the free moral agency of the king, God uses the wrath of man to praise him and the remainder he restrained. Similarly, God previously raised Joseph to the Governorship of Egypt for his own purposes.

The Prophet describes the tumult of that day of overwhelming trouble, when God's Kingdom will be established, saying of the sea that will swallow up the mountains, "The waters roar and be troubled; the mountains shake with the swelling thereof" (Psalm xlvi, 3). It is probably true that such socialistic and anarchistic roarings have many times in the past caused the kingdoms of earth and their rulers to tremble. But some day, according to the Scriptures, the final catastrophe will occur. How near that day may be who can tell? Quite a good many earnest Bible students concur in the thought that such a climax is indicated in the prophecies, for the year 1915. But be the date as it may, the fact remains. The prophecy we are examining is nearly three thousand years old, but it is as good, as sure, and as meaningful today as ever it was.

We are not of those who would harass the minds of our fellows with fear. Rather we would point them to the fact that behind this cloud of trouble there is a glorious silver lining of Millennial joy and blessing for all the families of the earth. Rather we would encourage all who have the hearing ear to zeal and faithfulness in their consecration, that they may "make their calling and their election sure" to a share in the Kingdom glories and "escape those things coming upon the earth" (Luke xxi, 36). In a word, the Gospel of Christ is not a message of damnation and fear and torture, but as the angels declared, "Good tidings of great joy which shall be unto all people" (Luke ii, 10).

In the fourth and fifth verses following our text the Church is symbolically pictured as the City or Kingdom of God, his dwelling-place. And the stream of Truth is represented as a river making the City clean and fresh and glad. The proclamation is made, "God is in the midst of her! She shall not be moved! God shall help her early in the morning"—early in the Millennial morning. The Church is to be "a first-fruits unto God." Her salvation as the Bride of Christ will be accomplished early in this Millennial morning. Oh, how glad will be all those accounted worthy of a place in that elect Church—"the Church of the First-borns, whose names are written in heaven!" "She shall not be moved," is in agreement with the first verse in assuring us that God's people will be preserved from fear and doubt and misunderstanding of the events of that "time of trouble" and that their faith will enable them to triumph at a time when others will be in great distress and perplexity (Luke xxi, 26).

Beginning with the sixth verse the Prophet gives a brief synoptical picture of the time of trouble and its consummation and the inauguration of universal peace. "The heathen (Gentile peoples) raged!" These words describe the tumult which will prevail amongst humanity in the great time of trouble before the climax is reached. "Raging," angry voices arise from public meetings, and in the more private meetings of the lodges of Labor and Capital, and through the columns of the Press to the extent permitted. In Germany the "raging" Press for some time has been muzzled. The same is true in other nations. In Great Britain, in the United States and in France there is a fear of tumult through public Press "raging," and everything possible is done to restrain it. Whoever sees that anarchy is the most dreadful terror confronting Civilization must realize the wisdom of reasonable restraits upon his own tongue and upon the tongues of others. Nevertheless the Scriptures show us that all effort to suppress the tumult and the angry voices of men selfishly "raging" out against each other will fail.

The prophetic picture continues—"God uttered his voice; the earth melted." The unfaithfulness of humanity, the clamor of greed, both in rich and in poor, will be answered by the Almighty. "Giver of every good and perfect gift." He will "utter his voice," or, as another prophet declares, "He will speak to the people in his anger," for their correction, for their reproval. The result will be that the symbolical earth (society) will melt—the social structure of civilization will disintegrate. Another Scripture declares that that disintegration will be so great that "every man's hand will be against his neighbor."

But the Prophet hastens to assure us that in the midst of all this tumult the Lord will be with his consecrated people. We read, "The Lord of hosts is with us. The God of Jacob is our refuge." This promise applies primarily to the consecrated Church of Christ—Spiritual Israel. But it also secondarily applies to fleshly Israel, the Jewish nation, which will participate in this time of trouble, but be saved out of it, as the Scriptures declare (Jeremiah xxx, 7). In this time of trouble the Lord's jewels, his saints, will be gathered to their heavenly home, after which Divine favor will begin to return to Israel (Romans xi, 25-30).

The Psalm closes with a picture of the devastation which will prevail throughout the world as a result of human selfishness and blindness. Capital and Labor will rise up to a terrible cataclysm of anarchy, awful for rich and poor alike. Only God's saints will then have peace, and that because of their knowledge of the grand outcome; because of their faith in God and their willingness to accept whatever his providence should send. Mark the grand symbolic apostrophe with which the Psalm closes! May its lessons draw us nearer to the Fountain of Grace and give us rest, peace and joy through obedience of heart to him, "He (Immanuel) maketh wars to cease unto the ends of the earth; he breaketh the bow in sunder; he burneth the chariot in fire. Be still and know that I am God. I will be exalted among the heathen (Gentiles); I will be exalted in the earth."

Eczema Must Yield To

THE WONDERFUL, SOOTHING, HEALING INFLUENCE OF

DR. CHASE'S OINTMENT

There is one thing you can depend on Dr. Chase's Ointment to do every time, and that is to cure eczema. There is no more severe test to which an ointment can be put, and because Dr. Chase's Ointment triumphed over eczema it has become the standard Ointment.

When another ointment is praised it is said to be as good as Dr. Chase's. And this illustrates the high position held by this preparation.

Mrs. Oscar Vancott, St. Antoine, Sask., writes: "I have found Dr. Chase's Ointment to be a permanent cure for eczema and other skin diseases. One son while nursing broke out with running, watery sores all over his head and around the ears. Many salves were prescribed to no effect. The child's head became a mass of scabs and he suffered untold agony. He became weak and frail, would not eat and we thought we would lose him.

"Providentially we heard of Dr. Chase's Ointment and it soon thoroughly cured him. He is seven years old now and strong and well. An older boy was also cured of eczema by this Ointment and we hope more people will learn about it so that their poor little ones may be saved from suffering."

Do not be satisfied with the experience of others, but put Dr. Chase's Ointment to the test when occasion arises. Try it for chafing and irritation of the skin, for chapped and cracked hands, for chilblains and frost bites, for sores and burns. It is delightfully soothing and healing. 60c. a box, all dealers; or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. Write for free copy of Dr. Chase's Recipes.

Mr. Aylesworth's Reply.

Ottawa, April 11.—Referring to Dr. Shearer's criticisms of his conduct toward the Miller bill, Hon. A. B. Aylesworth said:

"Yes, I saw the bill before it was drafted. Oh, yes, but I didn't say I approved of it. No, I said the bill was quite well calculated to accomplish the purpose which the promoters of the bill evidently had in mind. I remember now, that—yes, that was the phrase I used. I never gave anybody to understand that I approved of it. Quite the contrary.

"I told Mr. Miller weeks ago that the bill they were proposing would, in my opinion, render the maker of a personal bet liable to prosecution."

Brakeman Succumbed.

St. Thomas, April 11.—Thomas Jeffery of St. Thomas, N.C.R. brakeman, died Saturday night from injuries received in a rear-end freight collision at Waterford at one o'clock Saturday morning.

Several cars were smashed and the engine of the second train badly damaged. Pipes burst and the escaping steam badly scalded Engineer Foll and Brakeman Jeffery of St. Thomas.

The wreck will be investigated, but it is apparent that the second freight had run out of her block, endangering the first train.

Exciting Fire at Ottawa.

Ottawa, April 11.—Fire at the residence of E. Archambault imperilled the lives of his wife and two daughters, her mother and an uncle. A son returning at 11 p.m. found the house filled with smoke. All got out except Mrs. Archambault, who would not leave her mother, an invalid, who could not be moved. Chief Graham sealed the bedroom by plugging the space around the door, and by covering the invalid with a tarpaulin. The other woman was taken down a ladder.

Pastor After Fielding.

Ottawa, April 11.—Rev. R. G. Peever, pastor of McLeod street Methodist Church, yesterday morning condemned Hon. W. S. Fielding for having conducted his tariff negotiations at Albany on Sunday.

It ill-beseemed, he said, a Minister of a Government which had passed the Lord's Day Act, to desecrate the day by conducting public business upon it.

Had Weak Kidneys For Two Years.

Doctor Failed to Help. Doan's Kidney Pills Cured Him.

Mr. Edmund Asselin, New Carlisle, Que., writes:—"I feel it my duty to let you know of the great cure I have obtained by using Doan's Kidney Pills. I was troubled with my kidneys for two years. I tried a doctor, but he failed to help me. I read in the B.B.B. Almanac about Doan's Kidney Pills, and began using them, and after the first box began to feel better. I only used four boxes and they completely cured me. I am very thankful to have found so speedy a cure, and would advise everyone suffering from kidney disease to try them."

Perhaps no other organs work harder than the kidneys to preserve the general health of the body and most people are troubled with some kind of Kidney Complaint, but do not suspect it. It may have been in the system for some time. There may have been backache, swelling of the feet and ankles, disturbances of the urinary organs, such as brick dust deposit in the urine, highly colored, scanty or cloudy urine, bladder pains, frequent or suppressed urination, burning sensation when urinating, etc.

Do not neglect any of these symptoms, for, if neglected they will eventually lead to Bright's Disease, Dropsy and Diabetes.

Price 50 cents per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto.

AN ADDRESS READ

On Saturday evening Mr. D. Hughes Charles, manager of the Bank of Commerce, was presented with an address by the members of the Peterborough Club, the occasion being his departure on a three months' trip abroad. There were about forty present to do honour to the departing citizen. An address was read by Mr. W. H. Denham, expressing the high esteem in which Mr. Hughes-Charles is held by his many friends in Peterborough, and wishing both himself and Mrs. Hughes-Charles a pleasant outing and safe return, a sentiment which Mr. Charles can rest assured is heartily endorsed by the general public. They take their departure to-day.

Weak Kidneys Make Weak Bodies.

Kidney Diseases Cause Half the Common Aches and Ills of Peterborough People.

As one weak link weakens a chain, so weak kidneys weaken the whole body and hasten the final breaking-down.

Overwork, strains, colds and other causes injure the kidneys, and when their activity is lessened the whole body suffers from the excess of uric poison circulated in the blood.

Aches and pains and languor and urinary ills come and there is an ever-increasing tendency towards diabetes and fatal Bright's disease. There is no real help for the sufferer except kidney help.

Booth's Kidney Pills act directly on the kidneys and cure every kidney ill. Peterborough cures are the proof.

Mrs. R. Duncan, of 115 McDonnel street, Peterborough, Ont., says: "Some thirteen years ago I suffered with a severe attack of La Grippe that had up until this spring left me in a weakened and miserable condition. The kidneys had been disordered through this and became so inactive that doctors had pronounced Bright's disease and termed my case incurable. My back was very weak and the pains across the kidneys were most excruciating. I was unable to sleep through the night, and the desire to urinate was so frequent and irregular. The urine was highly coloured and contained a quantity of whitish sediment. I became so discouraged through my years of suffering that I had no care for anything. Booth's Kidney Pills were advertised at Wm. Madill's Pharmacy, and I tried them. The first box convinced me of their merits. I used three boxes of Booth's Kidney Pills and have been entirely cured. I am like a new person, well and strong, and can sleep through the night and awake refreshed and ready for the day."

COMING RAPIDLY NEARER TO EARTH

Halley's Comet Will Soon be Apparent to Naked Eye, Says Astronomers.

Those interested persons who have been rising at 5 in the morning, or staying up all night to see Halley's comet, and have told their friends of their wonderful observations, have mistaken the morning star for the famous heavenly spectacle, which will appear in the heavens in a few days. The comet rises in the morning about an hour before the sun, and is heading for the earth at a rapid rate. The comet moves around the sun in a retrograde motion, and on April 20 will attain a position nearest to it. In this position it is 14,000,000 miles distant from the greatest of heavenly bodies. The comet which is awakening world-wide interest, has made a record trip on its last journey through the heavens, which covered a period of seventy-four and one-half years. On other occasions it has taken as long as seventy-nine years to travel the same distance. The reason that the time is lessened on this occasion is owing to the fact that the attraction of Jupiter is much greater. The comet will attain its nearest position to the earth on May 18, when the earth will experience the sensation of passing through the tail of the comet. This beautiful streamer which follows in the wake of this fiery mass is composed of gases which are caused by the intense heat contained in the comet. These gases are known to contain poisonous elements, but in so small a percentage that they are not injurious to animal or vegetable life. In 1761 and 1835 the earth passed through this tail without injury.

The officials of the government observatory at Toronto state that in a few days the spectacle will be visible to the naked eye.

POST CARD COLUMN.

Peterborough, April 8.

Sir,—As a visitor to Peterborough permit me to remark on the streets, that a decent sized man is in danger of projections, and too low hanging awnings. In my country the low hanging signs have been long abolished as being dangerous and an obstruction to the view and prevent the air circulation in case of fire—very dangerous. With the river running through it, it would be possible to easily wash the sidewalks occasionally, which would make things healthier, seeing that so many of the stores and offices are swept out on to the street just as I am going to work. The habit of smoking in the busy part of the town is objectionable, there being little fresh air without stale tobacco smoke. I notice the vehicles seem to drive on any side of the road and that there are no bridges, and I am sure even residents will have noticed the very dilapidated fences in various parts of the town. Someone must have a lot of land to care for.—Yours truly, UNSIGNED.

FARCICAL LEGISLATION.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—In many instances by-law and by-word have become synonymous terms, through lax administration, and sometimes no effort made to carry out what purported to be a necessary decree in the interests of public welfare.

This degradation of minor law leads to violation of laws, that are important, and a disregard for constituted authority.

If press reports of the last council meeting are correct, Peterborough has some legislators in the Council that are woefully lacking in judicial administration.

It is bad enough for a citizen to willfully violate a law, but for a member of the Council to say, pass a law, but don't enforce it, is certainly very careless thought if not criminally folly.

Another member openly states his purpose to violate the law, because it interferes with his personal convenience.

While these statements are evidently thoughtlessly expressed, they are dangerous and pernicious in their influence. Rational opposition is all right, but laxity and defiance of law are twin evils that no legislator should be guilty of.

Ald. Turner has taken the right course in the judgment of a vast majority of citizens. The dog nuisance has become unbearable and redress must come; if ever there was a cur-cursed community it is Peterborough. We need this by-law and we need it enforced, too; not because of the rabies scare, for, judging from the foam that has appeared in the press recently, there is more danger of rabies among the owners than among the dogs.

The dog is a necessity in the country, but running at large in the city, he is a public nuisance, a menace to women and children, especially.

As citizens we have the supreme right to demand the safety of our wives and children on the streets, in preference to the mere indulgence of animal sentiment by the selfish dog owner, who would pamper his own pleasure regardless of public welfare.

We hear a lot about the "vagrant cur," but the cur and the cultured pup are both dog in nature and act: they commit the same deeds. There are too many of each class.

Look at the brazen effrontery of a writer recently, claiming the right to be a public nuisance because he paid one dollar tax. Why, the property his dog destroys is also taxed, probably more than one dollar. The Council has no right to permit a nuisance for any consideration. Tax is for privilege, not for plunder or imposition. It would be a decided improvement to make the tax $5.00, instead of $1.00.

It is the duty of the Council to make this law a success, not a farce; and they need not fear any of those dire threats at the polls. We have borne long and patiently this nuisance, and citizens will appreciate a much needed relief.

Yours truly, CITIZEN.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—We would like to know should the City Council appoint a Commissioner to secure new factories for the city. And should the Commissioner be lucky enough to get a proposition from a concern which needed power as an inducement, what power have the city to offer, other than some at $20.00 per H.P. offered by the Light and Power Co.

Now, it would appear that we are in need of a very active policy in this regard. For many cities and towns in the west have lots of power to offer, while we, the vaunted city of much cheap power, are without cheap power.

Now, we understand that the Kendry dam can be bought for from $100,000 to $125,000, with 900 H.P. already developed, and the same dam is capable of developing 600 H.P. more. Now, a rough estimate of these figures would make it appear that a good proposition to secure power is right in the city's hands. 900 H.P., already developed, would give a return of $18,000, and $20.00 per H.P. or 18 per cent. on $100,000 1,500 H.P., and $20.00 per H.P. will give a return of $30,000, which, on an expenditure of $150,000, will give 20 per cent. Now, these figures look interesting, and if 8½ per cent. will pay interest and sinking fund, why is not a proposition of this kind a good one for the city, which is so much in need of power, and can get it already developed and within the city limits; and, we understand, as well as the power, 18 or 19 acres of land, suitable for factory locations are included with this dam and power.

Surely, our City Council is not going to let this good chance slip through their fingers. What think you?

Yours truly, SOUTH END.

NEARLY SUFFOCATED

Two Hundred Poolroom Players Raided by the Police.

New York, April 8.—Two hundred poolroom players were nearly suffocated in a house on city hall place by the efforts of the roomkeepers to destroy racing sheets and other evidences of play when the place was raided by the police this afternoon.

As soon as the proprietors heard the sound of axes at the doors, they threw all papers into a big sheet iron can, kept ready for emergency, poured kerosene over the heap and threw a lighted match on top. The fire, partly hidden from the players by a low wooden partition, blazed fiercely, emitting volumes of suffocating smoke.

Terified at the thought of being trapped in a fire, the crowd fought and hammered at the door, while plain clothesmen among them to get evidence tried in vain to restore order by a display of their revolvers. A rush of fresh air from the street, when the door was broken down, and the sight of the police uniforms quieted the panic.

Six men, said to be the proprietors and employees, were arrested. The others went free.

THE HEART A GREAT WORKER

What a wonder is the heart! Day and night it works away pumping tons of blood through the body and never tires or wears out so long as it is supplied with rich, red blood, such as is formed by Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. While sending supplies of nutrition to other parts of the body the heart renews and rebuilds its own wasted cells and so retains health and strength.

TWO SNAKES IN A BOX

Young Man Tried to Send Them to Girl.

Manchester, N.H., April 9.—Two wriggling adders, each nearly 24 inches long, formed the contents of a paper box, which Michael Hasselbar, 22 years old, confided to Miss Alice Stuart, of 189 Lake Avenue, with a request that she give it to her chum, Miss Rosie Cabana, 18 years old, who had spurned his ardent advances. Inquisitive members of Miss Stuart's family lifted the cover of the box, which she had taken home after a vain attempt to find Miss Cabana. One of the snakes crawled partly out, but was jammed back and the box with its live specimens was rushed to the police station, where the snakes were killed. Hasselbar was arrested on a charge of disorderly conduct.

Splendid Display of New Flowers Under 4500 Feet of Glass—A Modern Equipment.

"The annual miracle has begun. The slender red spine of the tulip and the rounded yellow spatula of the narcissus are gently yet persistently forcing their passage through the clodded earth ,and are in process of being changed into the lovelier shades of leafage by the wonderful chemistry of sunshine. Our hope is for a springtime gladdened by beautiful flowers. Do we do wrong then, to project faith, which we usually term a quality of understanding, into the vegetable kingdom, and say that the bulbs teach us a lesson in its application?"

A visitor to the new greenhouse of Messrs. A .Blade & Son, situated on the corner of Park and Dublin street, wil enjoy a delightful hour, inspecting the beautiful show of flowering plants, foliage plants, ferns and palms, as well as the new modern structure and up-to-date methods employed for the propagation and culture of high-class stock.

Everything is at present in fine shape at these greenhouses, and looks promising for a good season's trade. The new crop is coming on splendidly, and the extensive display of rich and varied specimens of flowering and foliage plants comprise collections of the favourite standards and many new and highly cultivated specimens, specially introduced by Blade & Son.

Features of the New Stock.

Blade's new crop has been grown from the choicest stock procurable from the most reliable growers, and the result has been most gratifying. Specially worthy of mention is the new variety of asters known as the "Rochester light pink," which has a strong robust growth and branching habit. This ideal flower grows to six inches in diameter when forced to its best. There are also 5,000 geraniums, principally of the John Doyle and S. A. Nutt variety, which make a brilliant showing. Othere varieties are in begonias, stocks, tuberoses, canas, petunias, nasturtiums, salvias, balsams, pansies, zinnias, and a fine showing of the new plumosa fern. Roses and carnations will occupy a prominent feature as well as many other blooming plants. There are also over 2,000 foliage plants ready for garden growers. Large quantities of early vegetable bedding—out plants in boxes and pots are coming on rapidly, to be ready for the kitchen garden, such as celery, tomato, cabbage, cauliflower and onion seedlings.

The New Greenhouse Property.

The property secured by A. Blade & Son for greenhouse purposes consists of two acres of fine land, forming an eligble situation for floriculture, and runs north of Dublin street and east from Park street. Over 4,500 square feet of glass has been already put up in the two greenhouses, leaving room for further enlargements. A modern system of overhead steam heating has been installed, and patent ventilators, which have proved highly satisfactory.

A suitable office and work room are conveniently situated, and facilities for packing and storing provided. Orders for floral designs, cut flowers, filling hanging baskets, verandah boxes, and vases, receive prompt attention, and between two and three hundred urns are already in for filling.

Blade & Son wish to remind the public that they are in no way connected with the "West-End Greenhouses." Their telephone is 508.

WHY SO MANY INNOCENT GIRLS ARE LED ASTRAY

Lack of Proper Home Training and Inadequate Wages are Blamed by Rev. A. Aspinall McCuaig, Who Addressed Meeting in Opera House Yesterday.

The alarming and widespread result of so many of the evils of the present day have become of such a character that it is imperative that they be discussed in the plainest and most straightforward manner. That is a conviction shared by many of the most serious-minded Christian reformers of the present day and is quite evidently the emphatic opinion of Rev. J. Aspinall McCuaig, of New York, vice-president of the National Christian Union for the Promotion of Social Purity. In a mass meeting of men at the Grand Opera House yesterday afternoon Mr. McCuaig gave a direct and convincing address on social impurity in its various phases. He spoke broad-mindedly and fearlessly too and was not slow to criticize the Christian churches for the lack of interest they showed in underpaid working girls.

A woman, the speaker stated, was of a more trusting nature than a man, That was why so many innocent girls were led astray. In the course of his very interesting discourse Mr. Cuaig spoke of perverted sexual passion being the cause of God's wrath visiting the wrongdoers in scriptural days and conditions to-day were worse in the large American cities than in the days of Sodom and Gomorrah and God's wrath in the shape of unspeakable diseases still visited degenerate men. Mr. McCuaig had personally investigated the conditions in connection with the loathsome traffic in the United States and what he said was not merely hearsay. He referred specially to an American city of 150,000 population, where he had made a thorough study of conditions with the assistance of a detective. He dwelt at length on the deplorable conditions in New York Chicago and other metropolitan centres and spoke of the sad plight there of underpaid girls who came from poor families and were forced to live with not enough to pay for the board and laundry. They struggled on till they contracted debts for the necessities of life, which they found impossible to meet with their scanty incomes from their legitimate employment. In Canada conditions were better than in the United States, but there was a large amount of vice also in the fair Dominion. Morally the people were better, however, generally speaking, and that was to a large extent due to the fact that the Sabbath was observed, for in a country where the Lord's Day was desecrated evils of the most destructive and demoralizing character were given birth to.

Out of 500,000 prostitutes in the United States—about an average of one for every hundred and fifty of a population of men, women and children—450,000 had originally been inadequately paid working girls.

Several ringing statements of the speaker were vigorously applauded and among these was one to the effect that it was time for men making $14 or $18 a week to cease agitating and striking for higher wages for themselves and to insist that girls starting work in factories be paid a living wage. There was not a factory in the United States or Canada that paid girls for the first year enough for them to keep body and soul together.

Mr. McCuaig insisted that many went astray because they had not received early instruction in matters of vital importance to them. They should be enlightened on them instead of kept in ignorance concerning their purposes and abuses.

Mr. McCuaig addressed a meeting of women this afternoon at three o'clock in St. Paul's Presbyterian church and will lecture to-night to a general meeting of both men and women in St. Andrew's church on the white slave traffic and our children.

The Service May Not Be As Good If Water Is Lowered

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—The City Council has asked us to lower the water above our dam in order that the contractor, building the Smith St. bridge, may proceed iwth the work to better advantage. We have explained to the Whole Council that it is impossible for us to lower the head at the present time without interfering with our power customers. However, the Council thought the citizens generally would be wiling to suffer some inconvenience for a couple of weeks in order that this work may be proceeded with, consequently we have consented to lower the water on our dam for two weeks from Monday, the 11th. There is an exceptionally large flow of water coming down the river at the present and on this account the water backs up on our wheels and reduces our head, making it more difficult for us to operate. If we lower the head above the dam we are afraid we will not be able to produce sufficient power, with the wheels we have at present, to take care of our full load and it may be necesary to cut off all the residence lighting and the lighting on George St. during the da ytime. We have arranged with the Quaker Oats Co. to use considerably less power during the time the water is lowered, and we trust the customers of the Peterborough Light and Power Company will also bear with us and realize that the reason they are not getting as good service as usual is due to the fact that we are trying to help out the iCty Council. It is possible that the flow of the river may decrease before next week, in which case it may not be necessary to shut off the lighting as mentioned above. We hope to be able to carry all the factories and will do everything possible to also give our usual lighting service during these two weks.—Yours truly,

The Peterborough Hydraulic Power Company.

J. H. LARMONTH, Manager.

Sir,—After conferring with the Magistrate and City Clerk, his Worship took the chair in the hall opposite the T. A. S. Whilst counting the coats and erecting the awnings one alderman was accused of not paying the fine, but he got away, as there was no sign up, and the sleighs were all crowded. Mr. Coli Communi asked that no roaches be allowed on the roofs, without a license. A scene of disorder followed and the flag fell. but was readjusted by the representative of the aristocratic ward for imported amusements, who asked for a by-law to prevent suckers coming up the stream, as they interfered with the poll tax. The Clerk said there was more in newcomers if nets were used. Then the banquet was held on the foot-bridge, alongside the C. P. R. bridge, railway porters being excluded.

MISS JULIA CHOATE WINS SECOND PRIZE IN CONTEST

Receives Silver Medal in Earl Grey Musical Competition—A Signal Honour.

RESULTS OF CONTEST

Miss Julia Choate, of the Conservatory of Music, was successful in winning second prize in the violin contest in connection with the Earl Grey musical competition in Toronto last week, and as a result receives a silver medal. Her many friends in Peterborough will be glad to learn of her success. To win second place in such a field is no small exploit, and Miss Choate is deserving of all the praise she has received. Neither of the Peterborough organizations, which took part in the competition, were successful in winning a prize, but both were warmly received and gave a good account of themselves, incidentally advertising the city, musically, more than any other organizations have ever done.

The Toronto Globe says: At the conclusion of the performance Col. Septimus Denison announced the decision of the adjudicators as unanimous in every case, and the following are the principal awards: Orchestral—1, Ottawa Symphony Orchestra. Piat o, 1 D. C. Fairman, Toronto. 2, Miss Muriel Little, Cobourg. 3, Mr. J. Davidson Ketchum, Toronto. Violin—1 Miss Mae Getz, Montreal. 2, Miss Julia Choate Peterborough. 3, Miss Jessie Flook, Toronto. Male solo voice—1 Mr. Howard Russell, Toronto. 2, Mr. Arthur Brown, Toronto. 3 Mr. Arthur W. Black, Ottawa. Ladies' solo voices—1, Miss Kathleen Howard, Toronto 2 Miss Mabel Doherty, Toronto. 3, Miss Dayton Buchanan, Toronto. Dramatic—1, Dickens' fellowship. 2, Associate Players of the Margaret Eaton School of Literature and Expression. Col. Denison announced that, inasmuch as there was no classification as between the work of the choirs and orchestra, it had been decided to award a separate trophy to the best competing choir. The choir of St. Paul's Methodist church, therefore, wins this prize. The bracelet presented by Miss Margaret Anglin for the best actress in the competition was won by Miss Pattie Maclaren, London. The signet ring presented by Mr. J. E. Dodson for the best actor in the competition was won by Mr. Basil G. Morgan, Toronto. The prize for the best original play was won by Mr. George W. Pacaud, of Montreal. It seems to the writer that in future competitions should be properly classified and a separate night set apart for the hearing of competitors, as, for instance, choral competitors should be heard one night, orchestras another, and so on, with the exception, however, that the dramatic competitors would have each a separate evening. On the whole, the competitions just closed have proved immensely interesting and of incalculable benefit to the cause of music and drama, and Earl Grey is to be warmly and sincerely congratulated on his invaluable aid in this direction.

PEOPLE SHOULD MIND THEIR OWN BUSINESS

Rev. Dr. Langfeldt Deplores Tendency of Modern People to Indulge in Scandal-Mongering.

FORCIBLE SERMON

At St. Luke's church last night Rev. Dr. Langfeldt preached a forcible sermon on the tendency of people, instead of minding their own affairs, to meddle with other people's business. He depicted the village gossip going from house to house, dropping here and there insinuations for the purpose of destroying a person's reputation and character, the readiness with which people will accept and believe evil reports regarding their fellow men and the reluctance with which they will accept anything good that might be credited to their fellow beings, in spite of their professing Christianity. As Christ rebuked Saint Peter, when inquiring after the future destiny of Saint John, by telling him to look after his own duties, so the Christian people of to-day should attend to the performance of their duties in their relation to God, instead of looking at others and criticizing them for by so doing they might lose their own way to salvation.

The tendency of the present day is an indulgence in scandal, and those who profess to be on the highway to salvation appear to be the most given to scandal mongering.

ANNIVERSARY SERVICES HELD AT KNOX CHURCH

Rev. A. Logan Geggie Preached Two Inspiring and Eloquent Addresses Yesterday.

LARGE CONGREGATION

Anniversary services were held in Knox church yesterday when Rev. A. Logan Geggie preached two powerful sermons. Large congregations were present at both services and the remarks of the speaker were followed with close attention. Mr. Geggie is a forcible and eloquent preacher.

During the sermon the Rev. Mr. Geggie illustrated many beautiful incidents when the apparition of our Lord turned some of the most hardened sinners to the true path. Rev. Mr. Geggie crowned his argument on some of the most striking incidents which occurred to the followers of our Lord. The vision in which our Lord appeared to Moses was the first, that the preacher put before the minds of his hearers.

One day when Moses had led his flocks to the mountain of Horeb, God appeared to him in the midst of a burning bush. Moses was much astonished that the bush was not consumed and approached to see what it could mean but God commanded him to stand and take off his shoes from the place, which was holy. At the appearance of the Lord Moses fell on his face. God at this time chose Moses to lead the people out of Egypt and gave him Aaron as spokesman. The ravishing beauty of Christ's person and his words strengthened Moses and he went forth filled with confidence.

A man coming into this world has to meet temptations on all sides, it is necessary therefore that he put on the armour of faith, and by doing so he will be able on judgment day to come face to face with the Creator, thus fulfilling the beatitude, "Blessed are the clean of heart, for they shall see God."

The impression of our Lord's countenance may be seen by the lasting memory left on St. John. After fifty years St. John was describing his first vision which had been greatly absorbed in his memory and told the very hour and day that the vision occurred to him.

After the martyrdom of St. Stephen Saul became one of the most active persecutors of the Christians. Resolved on their ruin, he obtained letters, to the synagogues at Damascus, authorizing him to seize every man or woman that believed in the Lord. Animated with spirit and armed with the authority of the Jeursh priesthood, he started for Damascus. As he approached the place, suddenly a bright light shone round him, while at the same time, a voice said, "Saul, Saul, why dost thou persecute Me?" Trembling and confounded Saul went back to the place from whence he came and in the course of a few days Saul was baptized and became known as St. Paul. This great transformation was brought about by the persecutor coming face to face with the Creator.

If we can only realize what John and other men of vision saw it would strengthen us against the trials and troubles of this world of temptation.

Rev. Mr. Geggie concluded his sermon by a short prayer.

ARE DRIVING OUT JEWS

Persecution Is Going on Throughout the Empire and Jewish Residents Are In Terror — Educational Restrictions Are Being Made More Severe and Wholesale Robbery Is Now In Progress.

Berlin, April 11.—(N. Y. Times Cable.)—Expulsions of Jews from Russia are taking place on a scale unprecedented in extent and cruelty. The details received by the German Jewish Relief Association indicate that the number is increasing from day to day, and already reaches far into the thousands.

The entire Jewish population of the Russian Empire is, in a state of the utmost terror. Almost every community outside the limited regions where Jews are permitted to dwell, is daily the scene of wholesale evictions. Jews who have lived for many years in the Baltic provinces and also those resident in Kieff are being persecuted with especial severity.

In Kieff alone 1,200 families have been deprived of the right of further domicile.

One thousand six hundred families of Bokhara Jews have been driven from their homes during the last few weeks, and now find themselves in a most desperate plight. The Emir of Bokhara, acting in co-operation with the Jews' Russian persecutors, has refused to permit them to re-enter the country.

Even in the so-called settlement districts, where Jews are supposed to enjoy the unmolested right of domicile, the expulsion regime is in full swing. The authorities have harked back to the notorious Ignatieff "May laws" of 1882 and 1891, and with unrestrained cruelty are driving out the comparatively few Jews who inhabit the settlement districts and are compelling them to seek refuge in the overcrowded cities, where starvation and pauperism sooner or later compel them to flee the country.

Protests at the Russian Ministry of the Interior, which formerly resulted in the abatement of the particularly harsh expulsion methods, have now become entirely futile. There is no longer any doubt that the persecution movement has the support of the highest and most responsible authorities.

While the expulsions are taking place the Jews are being robbed more and more of the educational rights. Until recently the higher private schools were permitted to accept as many Jewish students as they pleased, regardless of the limited percentage which is allowed to attend the public schools. The Minister of Education, M. Schwartz, has now issued a decree prohibiting private schools from receiving a higher percentage of Jewish scholars than the public schools. He also ordained that the time which Russian Jews spend abroad in studying is no longer to be reckoned as "legal education."

Kuropatkin took offence at a speech in which Count Witte asserted that the modern Russian military commanders were lacking in moral courage.

Followed His Victim to Deathbed.

New York, April 11.—A savage audacity that shocked even old-timers, hardened to gang warfare on the east-side, marked a fatal stabbing affray last night. The aggressor followed his victim to a hospital, and stooping over him where he lay dying, whispered: "If you don't die, I'll get you yet." Before the horrified attendants could catch breath he had fled. Miller died a few minutes later, but not until he had given the name of his murderer.

Cast Up by the Sea.

Mount Vernon, N.Y., April 11.—A bottle thrown overboard from the French liner Touraine, on Aug. 9, 1909, off the coast of Newfoundland, was picked up off the coast of Wales, on March 25 last, in Fishguard Bay, Pembrockshire.

Aerodrome Company Closed.

Baddeck, N.S., April 11.—The Canadian Aerodrome Co. has closed down for one month. It is expected to resume operations about the first of May. This company furnishes employment to a large number of local men.

Despair and Despondency

No one but a woman can tell the story of the suffering, the despair, and the despondency endured by women who carry a daily burden of ill-health and pain because of disorders and derangements of the delicate and important organs that are distinctly feminine. The tortures so bravely endured completely upset the nerves if long continued.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a positive cure for weakness and disease of the feminine organism.

IT MAKES WEAK WOMEN STRONG, SICK WOMEN WELL.

It allays inflammation, heals ulceration and soothes pain. It tones and builds up the nerves. It fits for wifehood and motherhood. Honest medicine dealers sell it, and have nothing to urge upon you as "just as good." It is non-secret, non-alcoholic and has a record of forty years of cures. Ask Your Neighbors. They probably know of some of its many cures.

If you want a book that tells all about women's diseases, and how to cure them at home, send 31 one-cent stamps to Dr. Pierce to pay cost of mailing only, and he will send you a free copy of his great thousand-page illustrated Common-Sense Medical Adviser—revised, up-to-date edition, in paper covers. In handsome cloth-binding, 50 stamps. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N.Y.

JAPAN OR THE U. S.

Alarm and Distrust Caused by Recent Events In the Orient—Alliance of Britain and Japan Is Denounced—Earl Stanhope Expresses Apprehension of Japan's Recent Extension — Other Opinions.

London, April 11.—(N. Y. Times cable.)—Now that it is beginning to be realized here how keenly America is interested in the recent developments of the far eastern policy there is a growing disposition among Englishmen to study the bearings of the Anglo-Japanese treaty of alliance.

That treaty has been denounced in vehement terms this week from two different quarters, and the question of its renewal four years hence has been put in the terse form of "Great Britain's choice — Japan or the United States."

The problem of the Pacific ocean was a subject of debate at the monthly dinner of the Authors' Club, where non-literary topics are frequently selected for discussion. Earl Stanhope was the chief speaker, and although he diplomatically refrained from expressing disapproval of Japanese methods, the tenor of his speech indicated that he shares to a considerable extent that distrust of Japan's sudden extension of territory and powers which, backed as it is by the command of the Pacific, is causing alarm in Australia and America.

Japan, he said, was at the parting of the ways. She had to decide in the near future whether she intended to hold her colonies for her own good, to suck them dry after England's old colonial manner, or whether she would govern principally with a view to their betterment and only indirectly for her own.

Lord Stanhope plainly intimated his belief that Japanese ambitions were such that, if Englishmen were to retain their own high ideals, they could have no part or lot in them.

Other speakers went further. F. B. Wooman said: English people should beware lest the Anglo-Japanese alliance handed over to Japan the supremacy of the Pacific Ocean, for with it would go Australia, India, Hawaii, the Philippines, and Alaska, and that would give the supremacy of the human race to the yellow man.

The World, of which Lord Winterton is editor, makes a special feature of an article urging "serious reconsideration of the British policy in regard to Japan." According to this article Japan is to the United States, strategically and commercially, and, in fact, in every way, what Germany is to Great Britain.

"To a large extent," continues the writer, Lancelot Lawton, "we were compelled to enter into the original alliance with Japan, for at that time we were afraid of Russia, and not without reason. It is within the writer's knowledge that while negotiations for the first treaty of alliance were in progress the late Prince Ito was making certain friendly overtures in St. Petersburg.

Claims Big Damages.

Smith's Falls, April 11.—George E. Peacock, a former employe of the Frost & Wood office here, has brought an action against J. E. Ruby, general manager of the Frost & Wood Co.; H. Cockshutt, managing director of the Cockshutt Plow Co., Brantford, and Lloyd Harris, M.P., president of the Canada Bolt & Nut Co. The claim is for $20,000 damages for an alleged unlawful conspiracy on the part of the defendants to induce the Toronto Bolt & Forging Co. and other employers not to employ him, thereby depriving him of his means of livelihood.

English Spinners to Reduce Wages.

Manchester, Eng., April 11.—The master cotton spinners' federation has voted in favor of a five per cent reduction in the wages of operatives, and have called a joint meeting of employers and operatives to discuss the matter. The step was taken owing to the depression in the cotton trade. It is believed that the operatives will strongly resent the proposition.

Skin Diseases.

Under this name such troubles as Salt Rheum, Eczema, Erysipelas, Tetter, Shingles, Psoriasis, Scurf, Itching Rashes, Eruptions, Boils, Pimples, etc., are included. Skin diseases, as a rule, are not dangerous, but are unsightly, irritating and often terribly annoying to the sufferer; they depend mainly on bad blood, from one cause or another, for if the blood is pure and the circulation good no skin disease can exist, except it arise from lack of proper cleanliness or from contagion.

To get rid of skin diseases it is necessary to observe strictly all the laws of health; maintain regular action of the bowels; avoid high living, eating only plain nourishing food. Cleanse and keep the blood pure by taking Burdock Blood Bitters, which unlocks all the secretions, and makes new rich blood by acting on the entire system.

Had Salt Rheum Six Years.

Mrs. E. M. Myers, East Jeddore, N.S., writes:—"I don't think there is anyone in this Dominion can recommend Burdock Blood Bitters more than I can. I suffered terribly with Salt Rheum for six years, and did everything for it without relief. For curiosity sake I bought six bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters, and it completely cured me. I would advise others to use it."

FIVE DISTRICTS LIKELY IN MIDLAND LEAGUE

Provisional Schedule Was Drawn Up at Meeting of Y.M.C.A. Saturday---Three Local Clubs are Drawn up in One Group.

At a meeting held in the Y. M. C. A. on Saturday afternoon the schedule for the season was provisionally adopted. There may be some changes in the draft adopted but at present it looks as if there would be five districts with the three Peterborough clubs, the Brintons, Canadian General Electric Company team and the Peterboroughs grouped together in district No. 3. Such an arrangement would be greatly in the interests of the game, as there would be no travelling expenses and the rivalry engendered by having three local teams clashing would help to boom the soccer article in the city.

The following schedule was adopted:

District One.

May 7.—Bowmanville at Oshawa.
" 14.—Oshawa At Bowmanville.
" 21.—Bowmanville at Oshawa.
" 24.—Oshawa at Bowmanville.

District Two.

Bethany—To be arranged.

District Three.

Apr. 30—C.G.E. at Brintons.
May 7.—Peterboroughs at C.G.E.
" 14.—Brintons at Peterboroughs.
" 21.—Brintons at C.G.E.
" 28.—C.G.E. at Peterboroughs.
June 1.—Peterboroughs at Brintons.

District Four.

May 6.—Lakefield at Warsaw.
" 13.—Warsaw at Lakefield.
" 20.—Lakefield at Warsaw.
" 24.—Warsaw at Lakefield.

District Five.

Havelock—To be arranged.

Any clubs, either senior or junior, wishing to become affiliated with this League should communicate with the sec.-treas., E. E. Brumwell, 59 Hilliard St., Peterborough and arrangements for grouping will be made promptly.

THE BATTER'S SOLILOQUY

(With the usual fervent apologies.)

To bunt or not to bunt, that is the question.
Whether 'tis better for me to drop
The Spalding in front of the pan
Or to lean up against a speedy inshoot
And slamming, end the game. To bunt, to bunt,
No more, and by a bunt to say we end
The agony and please the thousand worried fans
That crowd the bleachers, 'tis a consummation
Devoutly to be wished. To bunt, to bunt,
To foul, perchance to miss. Aye, there's the rub,
For if I miss the ball what knocks may come
When the man from third is nailed at the plate
Must give me pause; there's the fizzle
That makes ridiculous the famous "squeeze."
For who would bear the calls and jeers of fans,
The manager's frown, the grandstand's contumely,
The pangs of bone-head play, the crowd's ha-ha,
The insolence of umpires and the knocks
That a player who foozles generally takes,
When he might instead make himself solid
With a four-sacker? Who would take the chance
Of missing in an attempt to bunt?
But that dread of something after the game
The call from the manager whose order
No player disobeys, makes us think?
And we rather do as we are signalled
Than slam the ball as we would like.
Thus does team-work make slaves of us all,
And thus the husky home run slugger
Sometimes has to just lay down the ball
And chances for a long hit to the woods,
In this regard are all thrown away
For a sacrifice instead. But soft! here comes the umpire.

PROSPECTS ARE EXCELLENT FOR CITY BASEBALL LEAGUE

The baseball enthusiasts of the city are asked to be out in large numbers at the meeting of the Senior City Baseball League in the Y. M. C. A. to-morrow night, when the organization for the season will be completed, officers elected and other important business transacted. There is every indication that the League will boom this season as the clubs seem enthusiastic and anxious to get things going. Already some of the clubs have been practising and the probabilities are that the League will be gotten under way about a month earlier than last year if the weather conditions are anything like what they were last week. Last season the League opened on Saturday, June 5, but there seems no reason why the campaign shouldn't start the first Saturday in May, unless to-day's brand of weather continues. It looks as if the League would consist of the same four clubs as last season—the T. A. S., Park St. A. C., West Ends, and Strathconas.

C. G. E. ORGANIZES TEAM FOR THE MIDLAND LEAGUE

Canadian General Employees are Enthusiastic Over the Prospects and Will Have a Strong Eleven.

MANY AT PRACTICE

At an enthusiastic meeting of the employees of the C. G. E. on Saturday night in the Y. M. C. A. the Canadian General Electric Company football team was organized for the season, and it was decided to place a team in the Midland Football League. The prospects for a strong team are of the brightest. The employees are delighted with the outlook, and are decidedly enthusiastic, no less than thirty-seven players turning out to practice on Saturday afternoon. It is expected that there will be no difficulty in selecting an eleven from the material in sight that will be a credit to the Canadian General, as well as to the city. It was decided that the club's colours should be blue and white, and the uniforms will consist of blue knickers, with a white stripe along the side and white jerseys, with the emblem of the Canadian General in blue on the crest.

The following officers were elected:

Patrons and Patronesses—Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Patterson, Mr. and Mrs. H. Ritchie, Mr. Magee.
Hon. President—Mr. Robt. Dobie.
Hon Vice-Pres.—Mr. W. Brundette.
President—Mr. Robert Anson.
Vice President—Mr. J. G. Wilson.
Secretary-Treasurer—W. Milburn.
Committee—J. Hampton, A. French. W. Milburn.

Arrangements are being made for practise grounds, and the club will go into training at once. It is likely that they will open the season with a game against the Brintons two weeks from Saturday.

HISTORY OF MEN WHO HAVE HELD WOLGAST'S TITLE

Some Classy Fighters Have Been Champions Before Addie Handed a Beating to Battling Nelson.

LIGHTWEIGHT GOSSIP

Detroit, Michigan, April 10.—When Ad Wolgast beat the durable Dane into a state of insensibility in the open air pavilion in 40 rounds, he proved beyond a doubt that he was a worthy successor to Nelson, Gans, Britt, Young Corbett, Erne, Lavigne and McAuliffe, light weight kings of the last twenty years.

Of all the lightweight champions, Jack McAuliffe and "Kid" Lavigne were the most popular. McAuliffe was never beaten. Jack Dempsey handed the lightweight title over to McAuliffe. The three Jacks—Sullivan, Dempsey and McAuliffe—were supreme in their day.

Dempsey was the first to fall, going down before Fitzsimmons in 1891. Sullivan was toppled over by Corbett in 1892, and McAuliffe quit the ring before anybody had a chance to beat him. The nearest McAuliffe ever came to defeat was at the hands of Jem Carney, the English lightweight champion. They fought at Revere beach, Boston, with skin tight gloves, and Carney is said to have had the best of it, when McAuliffe's friends broke up the fight.

McAuliffe when at the zenith of his career, was backed by Dick Roche, who furnished McAuliffe's side stake when the champion fought a draw with Billy Meyer at North Judson, Ind. Mike McDonald furnished Meyer's side stake. Meyer and McAuliffe fought afterwards at New Orleans and McAuliffe won hands down. It was Jack's last big battle. He became a racetrack bookmaker and passed the title over to George Lavigne.

Lavigne hailed from Saginaw, Mich., and was backed by the Considine brothers of Detroit. While McAuliffe was a more scientific boxer than Lavigne, the Saginaw kid had the stiffest punch of any man that ever fought at 133 pounds. He beat Dick Burge, the English champion, in the ring of the National Sporting Club, London, in 1896, in seventeen rounds.

Sam Fitzpatrick had Livigne in charge and advised Burge's cockney mob to be careful about betting their Bank of England notes. Burge was a 1 to 10 shot the night of the fight. Lavigne surprised everyone by giving Burge the worst hiding of his career.

The Michigan thumper put the British champion out in the seventeenth. Burge never came to until the next day. Another great fight of Lavigne's was the fifteen round battle with Joe Walcott at Maspeth, L. I. Tim Hurst refereed that contest and has often said it was the wickedest fight he ever saw.

Walcott was short and squatty, something on the order of Sam Langford. Black as an ace of spades, he picked Lavigne as an easy mark. But the kid was there with the wallop. One year prior to meeting Walcott he had killed Andy Bowen in the ring at New Orleans.

LAVIGNE KNEW NO FEAR

Lavigne knew no fear, waded into Walcott, and tickled the black bear's slats. He never wasted a punch on Walcott's head, but kept pumping right and left into Walcott's body until he had the black hanging on the ropes and yelling for help.

Britt never had much claim to the championship, but he managed to gain considerable prestige and acquire quite a bunch of coin while he posed as the title holder. The clever Californian won on a foul from Joe Gans in 1904 and claimed the championship until Battling Nelson knocked him stiff at Colma in 1905.

Gans acquired the title by beating Frank Erne in one round at Buffalo in March, 1902. In November of the same year Britt knocked Erne out in fifteen rounds at San Francisco. On the strength of his victory over Erne Britt claimed the title. He also beat Young Corbett in twenty rounds and outpointed Battling Nelson in twenty rounds in 1904, the year he won from Gans on a foul in five rounds.

Nelson disputed Britt's claim to the title and the pair met at Colma, Cal., in September, 1905. Britt, a much cleverer boxer than Nelson, gave the durable Dane, a rattling good argument, but Nelson was there with bundles of endurance and grit and put Mr. Britt on his back in the eighteenth round.

BAT NELSON CLAIMS TITLE

Nelson claimed the championship after beating Britt. While the general public accepted Nelson as the champion, ring experts said that the Dane would never acquire a clear title to the belt until he had disposed of Joe Gans, the first man to beat Frank Erne.

Gans was fighting in the welter-weight division and had just beaten Mike (Twin) Sullivan for the welter-weight championship, when Nelson threw down the gauntlet.

Gans, when at his best, carried a prodigious punch in either hand and was fast. Nelson beat Britt in 1905, and one year later took on Gans at Goldfield, Nev. A record breaking house witnessed the fight, the gate receipts amounting to $34,000, of which Nelson got $23,000 and Gans $11,000.

The battle went forty-two rounds and Referee Silver gave the fight to Gans on a foul.

On July 4, 1908, Gans and Nelson met again and this time Nelson put the "yellow kid" out of business in seventeen rounds. It was a great fight, and Gans died game, as they say.

COCAINE CRUSADE

Sensational Developments Have Been Made in the Investigation.

Special to The Examiner:

Philadelphia, Pa., April 8.—A sensational development in the investigation of the Pharmaceutical Board which is carrying on a crusade against the illegal sale of cocaine in this city was made to-day. Benjamin P. Ashmead, United States Government Inspector of Drugs for the port of Philadelphia, was arrested on a warrant charging him with being connected with the traffic. The warrant was sworn out by a man whose name is withheld, who charges that Ashmead is the largest distributor of the drug to peddlers in Philadelphia.

Dr. Christopher Koch of the States Board, who is directing the crusade, said this afternoon that it was possible for Ashmead to obtain cocaine at $3 an ounce and sell it to peddlers at $6 an ounce. These peddlers, Dr. Koch said, in turn sold the cocaine in small quantities to users of the drug at a profit of between $25 and $30 and sometimes $40 an ounce.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Preparations are being made for another world cruise of the U. S. fleet.

W. Ponto, an aged resident of Berlin, Ont., was killed by falling from a window.

Two Chinamen were murdered in New York and two in Philadelphia yesterday.

W. Ponto, aged 75, of Berlin, Ont., was fatally hurt by falling from his bedroom window.

B. & O. Southwestern Railway switchmen have accepted an increase of three cents per hour.

On April 18, motion will be made at Osgoode Hall, Toronto, to quash the Almonte local option bylaw.

Capt. Tatlow was thrown out of his buggy at Victoria, B.C., and is in a critical condition from his injuries.

Socialists and Radicals held a most impressive demonstration in favor of Prussian suffrage reform in Berlin.

Owen Sound ratepayers on April 30 will vote on a bylaw to loan $20,000 to the Imperial Portland Cement Co.

Almonte's financial statement shows a deficit of $2,000, but council, by one vote, defeated a resolution to investigate the cause.

Next to France, the U. S. is the largest exporter of autos, and Canada is her best customer, taking 1,230 machines last year.

The demand for help from the west is very keen. It is estimated that 12,000 men could find immediate employment on the farms.

The plants of the Union Drawn Steel Co. and the Acme Typewriting Co. at Beaver Falls, Pa., were burned Saturday night; loss $50,000.

Dr. Hodge of Clark University, Worcester, Mass., is coming to Ontario to examine a nest of a wild pigeon said to have been found here.

John Jarvis, an old C.P.R. pensioner, over 70 years of age, was found on the lake shore at North Bay lying in the water with a bullet through his brain. He had no relatives.

A Socialist Bishop.

London, April 11.—The appointment of an Advanced Churchman as successor to Bishop King at Lincoln has caused more distress among Tory churchmen than to the Evangelicals. There is less talk about sacredotalism than there was when Mr. Gladstone nominated Dr. King, but much more about extreme politics. Canon Hicks, the Bishop-elect, is a thoroughgoing Radical, in sympathy with the labor movement. He is even described by excited Tories as a Socialist, like Hardie. As the Bishops of Birmingham and Truro are classed with him as Socialist prelates, he will not have a lonesome feeling on the episcopal bench.

Britain's Ninth Dreadnought.

Clydesbank, Scotland, April 11.—The Colossus, Great Britain's ninth battleship of the Dreadnought type, was launched here Saturday. The vessel has a displacement of 22,000 tons. The keel was laid nine months ago.

The Colossus is the first British battleship to be built on the principle of rising inner turrets, so that the guns can be trained over the after most main armament. Ten twelve inch guns will be so placed that six can be trained ahead, eight astern and all ten on either beam.

Miss Morgan In Trousers.

Pasadena, Cal., April 11—Miss Anna Morgan, daughter of J. Pierpont Morgan, created some excitement Saturday when she appeared in front of the Raymond Hotel clad in long trousers over which she wore a skirt of medium length. It is her new riding costume.

mitage to have kept away from you, Shirley, after all that fuss about the bogus baron."

"Which he wasn't"—

"Well, Sanderson says he couldn't have been, and the rogues' gallery pictures don't resemble our friend at all."

"Ugh, don't speak of it!" And Shirley shrugged her shoulders. She suffered her eyes to climb the slopes of the far hills. Then she looked steadily at her brother and laughed.

"What do you and father and Baron von Marhof want with Mr. John Armitage?" she asked.

"Guess again!" exclaimed Dick hurriedly. "Has that been the undercurrent of your conversation? As I may have said before in this connection, you disappoint me, Shirley. You seem unable to forget that fellow."

He paused, grew very serious and bent forward in his wicker chair.

"Have you seen John Armitage since I saw him?"

"Impertinent! How dare you?"

"But, Shirley, the question is fair!"

"Is it, Richard?"

"And I want you to answer me."

"That's different."

He rose and took several steps toward her. She stood against the railing, with her hands behind her back.

"Shirley, you are the finest girl in the world, but you wouldn't do this"—

"This what, Dick?"

"You know what I mean. I ask you again—have you or have you not seen Armitage since you came to the Springs?"

He spoke impatiently, his eyes upon hers. A wave of color swept her face, and then her anger passed, and she was her usual good natured self.

"Baron von Marhof is a charming old gentleman, isn't he?"

"It's a great privilege for a young man like you to know him, Dick, and to have private talks with him and the governor about subjects of deep importance. The governor is a good deal of a man himself."

"I am proud to be his son," declared Dick, meeting Shirley's eyes unflinchingly.

Shirley was silent for a moment, while Dick whistled a few bars from the latest waltz.

"A captain—a mere captain of the line—is not often plucked out of his post when in good health and standing—after a long leave for foreign travel—and sent away to visit his parents and help entertain a distinguished ambassador."

"Thanks for the 'mere captain,' dearest. You needn't rub it in."

"I wouldn't. But you are fair game—for your sister only. And you're better known than you were before that little supper for the Spanish attache. It rather directed attention to you, didn't it, Dick?"

Dick colored.

"It certainly did."

"And if you should meet M. Chauvenet, who caused the trouble"—

"I have every intention of meeting him."

"Oh!"

"Of course I shall meet him—some time, somewhere. He's at the Springs, isn't he?"

"Am I a hotel register that I should know? I haven't seen him for several days."

"What I should like to see," said Dick, "is a meeting between Armitage and Chauvenet. That would really be entertaining. No doubt Chauvenet could whip your mysterious suitor."

He looked away, with an air of unconcern, at the deepening shadows on the mountains.

"Dear Dick, I am quite sure that if you have been chosen out of all the United States army to find Mr. John Armitage you will succeed without any help from me."

"That doesn't answer my question. You don't know what you are doing. What if father knew that you were seeing this adventurer"—

"Oh, of course, if you should tell father! I haven't said that I had seen Mr. Armitage, and you haven't exactly told me that you have a warrant for his arrest. So we are quits, captain. You had better look in at the hotel dance tonight. There are girls there and to spare."

"When I find Mr. Armitage"—

"You seem hopeful, captain. He may be on the high seas."

"I shall find him there—or here!"

"Good luck to you, captain!"

There was the least flash of antagonism in the glance that passed between them, and Captain Claiborne clapped his hands together impatiently and went into the house.

WAS KILLED BY A TRAIN

Young Man While Returning From Guelph Has Trouble With His Frightened Team Near Guelph Junction, and Is Thrown In Front of Engine—Crew Try to Save Him; Are Unsuccessful.

Guelph, April 12.—Caught at a level crossing over which he was driving a team and wagon, Frank Watson of Campbellville was instantly killed at Guelph Junction, 15 miles from the city.

The horses took fright at the approaching train and, becoming unmanageable, took young Watson on the track. One horse was killed; the other was unhurt.

The pilot of the engine struck the front wheels of the wagon, smashing it to pieces, and throwing the occupant several yards ahead, where he fell to one side of the track. The train stopped immediately, and the crew did all that was possible for the victime of the accident. They telephoned from Guelph Junction station for Dr. Carbert of Campbellville, who hurried to the scene only to find all signs of life extinct.

Coroner McCard of Milton was called, and after examining the body and the wreckage and getting the evidence of a few eye-witnesses he decided that death had been caused by the collision and that an inquest was unnecessary.

The remains were taken to the young man's home. One of the horses was killed and the other injured. The funeral took place at Campbellville yesterday afternoon. Frank Watson was a popular young man. He was between twenty and twenty-five years of age and was unmarried, living at home with his parents.

Want Railway Electrified.

Niagara Falls, Ont., April 12.—For some time rumors have been rife that the Michigan Central would electrify the branch between here and old Niagara. Yesterday the Board of Trade took official steps, communicating with the railway officials, asking that it be done at once.

Said He Was Starved to Death.

Sherbrooke, Que., April 12.—Coroner Bachland was called to Island Brook to investigate the death of W. B. Morgan at the home of his daughter Saturday morning. Previous to his death the deceased made a statement before a notary that he had been starved, and what bread, he did get was made from shorts, and that other eatables were locked away from him.

Havoc of Nitro-Glycerine.

Wellsville, N.Y., April 12.—A magazine of the E. I. Dupont Co. at Fulmer Valley containing 800 quartz of nitro-glycerine was blown to atoms yesterday, Charles P. Key, an oil well shooter, was killed.

A hole was torn in the rocks twenty feet deep and eighty feet wide, and the woods covering two acres were leveled to the ground.

Woman Swallowed Table Knife.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 12.—Seventeen physicians assisted at an operation for the removal of a table knife nine inches long from the stomach of Mrs. Sarah Carlson, an insane woman. She is recovering. It was several hours before the physicians could be induced to believe that the woman was not joking.

Bold Footpads.

Windsor, April 12.—Beneath the glare of an electric light, footpads held up Charles McIntosh, in the hope of securing the day's receipts of the W. E. & L. S. Railway, of which he is local manager. Before their purpose was accomplished passers-by came to the rescue.

Raised $324,000 In 28 Minutes.

MILLER IS AGGRIEVED

Toronto Is Defeated Twice In Fighting Railway Legislation — Opposition Charges Padding of Camp Payrolls —Memorandum of the Tariff Agreement Is Issued by the Department of Finance.

Ottawa, April 12.—H. H. Miller, in the House of Commons yesterday, referring to a complaint from Hon. A. B. Aylesworth that he had made public a communication as to the anti-betting bill, said:

"When I asked the Minister for his legal opinion, surely the letter I received in reply, not being marked personal or confidential, was a letter that one might expect could be made public. I would ask if the opinion of the Minister of Justice, when requested by a member of the House, are to be treated as private correspondence, of what value is that opinion?

"I do say that if I had used the Minister of Justice as he has used me in this matter I would have thought I had struck below the belt, and that I had not acted either honestly or honorably."

Mr. Aylesworth in reply said he had had no idea "of imputing any dishonorable conduct," but that he had never expected that this "friendly conversation" would have been a matter of public discussion afterwards in any public form.

"I did not consider—and I do not consider now—that because I happened to be Minister of Justice I am in any way legal adviser for the House as a whole, or for any member of the House," said Mr. Aylesworth.

Mr. Miller had something more to say of the Minister's objections to the private betting restrictions.

"I said to the Minister of Justice," declared Mr. Miller, "'If this bill, in your opinion, would affect the man who makes a private bet, I would like you to suggest any language that you can suggest that would leave out the private bettor and exempt him.' He said, 'I cannot suggest any language that would be an improvement on the bill as it is drawn in that respect.' Afterwards I myself, fearing the Minister of Justice might make some further objection to the bill in that regard, drafted a clause and submitted it to him, and I have it here as I submitted it to him, and as he, in his own writing, amended it in order, as he thought, to fit the case. I said, 'Will that amendment fit the bill as you have changed it, and exempt the private bettor?' He said, 'I think it will.' What I contend is that he advised me in one way when I consulted him, and advised the House in another way," he said.

Mr. Aylesworth left his seat and walked out. Mr. Miller followed him and they had a conference in the Minister's private office.

Third readings were given the following bills in the House last night: Incorporating the Morrisburg Ferry & Dock Co.; incorporating the Ottawa, Rideau Valley and Brockville Railway; respecting the Dominion Bank; respecting the Smith's Falls & Ottawa Railway Co.

During question time Mr. Girard asked if the Government was aware that, since the retirement of Col. Wurtele of the 18th Regiment (Chicoutimi, Que.), the pay lists of the various regimental camps which have been held, it is alleged, have been covered with false names of persons who were never at the camps. The Minister of Militia said that the Department had no knowledge of it.

Mr. Crosby asked if it was true that Justice Britton had acted as a director of the National Trust Co. of Toronto. Mr. Aylesworth said that the Department of Justice had not been so informed, but Justice Britton would be communicated with.

The Finance Department issued last night a memorandum on the proposed changes in the Canadian customs tariff as the result of the new agreement wth the United States.

For the year ended March 31, 1909, the value of the articles on which reduction are proposed were: From the United States, $4,814,293; from other countries under general tariff, $8,015,507; less imports from countries to which the reduced rates apply under the French treaty, $1,615,335; amount of imports affected by the proposed reduction in duties $6,400,172; estimated amount of reduction in duties on goods from all countries, $263,149.

The estimate amount of reduction in revenue on goods imported from the United States is $192,814. The revenue on the proposed tariff will be $927,861, as against $1,120,675 collected in 1909-09.

Toronto met with two reverses in the House yesterday, when despite the valiant opposition of A. C. Macdonnel (South Toronto), the bills to incorporate the Hamilton, Waterloo & Guelph, and the Toronto & Eastern Radial Railway Companies were squeezed through to stand for third readings.

There was some lively repartee in connection with the Toronto & Eastern bill, and Col. Sam Hughes made some "smart" references to Toronto's aldermen. When the bill was taken up, Major Currie objected to it being proceeded with in the absence of its sponsor, Mr. Fowke, Liberal member for South Ontario. Hon. Mr. Graham said there was no reason why the bill should not be proceeded with.

Major Currie said he would put all bills which were contentious go to the bottom of the order paper. It was high time the British practice of making members ballot for their places on the order paper at the opening of the session.

Major Currie and Mr. T. W. Crothers argued further against the bill on the question of jurisdiction, but the discussion stopped abruptly at 9.45.

NATURALISTS DISAGREE

The Degree of Pressure Which Each Has Brought to Bear on Premier Asquith Is the Momentous Question Over Which O'Brienites and Redmondites Are Qparrelling In the British Commons.

London, April 12.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The political topic of the moment is Wm. O'Brien's bombshell as to the Government's offers of concessions for the Irish vote. O'Brien describes Lloyd-George's denial as astounding and will make a statement in the Commons either to-day or to-morrow.

Redmond supports the Chancellor, and says O'Brien's statement is a fable, but the situation is rendered much more difficult for the Cabinet. Quarrels between the Redmondites and Independents regarding which has applied hardest squeeze are certain to damage the Government, whatever the result may be to the Irish parties. The budget, which was thought to be safe, is coming up next week. It will now be awkward for Redmond to support the Government in all the stages. There is, however, much irritation among the Ministerialists against the Irishmen. Asquith's declaration last night that the bill founded on the veto resolutions will contain in the preamble a declaration about a reformed second chamber, does not please the Laborites and the more extreme radicals.

Temperance Whisky.

Westerly, R.I., April 12.—The deaths of nearly a dozen persons in Westerly and Stonington, Conn., and vicinity within a week under circumstances indicating that most of them had been poisoned by wood alcohol contained in a mixture labelled "whisky," has stirred the authorities of Rhode Island and Connecticut. It is believed that a clerk in mixing a "medicinal whisky" ignorantly used wood alcohol. Westerly is a temperance town.

Suicided In Smokestack.

Ansonia, Conn., April 12.—In the discovery just made of the body of Fred H. Smith, under a pile of soot at the bottom of the 102-foot smokestack of a local shop, the authorities believe, is revealed probably the most remarkable suicide in the history of the state.

It is believed that Smith climbed to the top of the stack and jumped down inside. Smith was last seen alive during last Christmas week.

Borden-Monk Troubles.

Montreal, April 12.—The French Conservative Clubs will meet to-night at the La Fontaine Club, when some action wil be taken re the Borden-Monk troubles.

It is understood that a motion will be proposed expressing confidence in Mr. Monk. The Monk Club is at the head of the present movement.

There is also a strong element amongst the young men to cut adrift from the English wing.

Blind Pig Raided.

Brantford, April 12.—While playing with a revolver with some other boys, not knowing it was loaded, Edwin Brunsdon, aged 16, was shot in the leg.

The police raided an alleged "blind pig" at 100 Dalhousie street Sunday. The lessees claim they are a club, each member having individual lockers in which his own refreshments are stored. The police will make it a test case.

Cannon's Defi.

Washington, April 12.—Speaker Cannon yesterday again defied the "insurgents" to depose him from the Speakership, declaring in a speech on the floor of the House: "Unless the Republicans who do not approve of the personality of the Speaker have the courage to join the solid minority, I remain Speaker until March 4 next."

Woman Defied Sheriff's Posse.

Green Castle, Ind., April 12.—With a repeating rifle, Mrs. Della Poland held a sheriff's posse at bay seven miles southeast of this city early yesterday morning, and under cover of her fire she and her husband, John Poland, a farmer, charged with horse stealing, escaped.

First Western Crop Report.

Winnipeg, April 12.—The Canadian Northern Railway issued its first weekly crop report yesterday. It shows quite a large amount of seeding completed, and that the seed bed is in ideal condition. The season is a month ahead of any record kept by the company.

Steamer Calvin Burned.

Kingston, April 12.—Early yesterday morning the steamer D. D. Calvin, lying at Garden Island, caught fire, and was well gutted. The steamer was sold by the Calvin Co. to Parlow & Smith, of Belleville, recently, for $8,000.

Galt's Offer Accepted.

Galt, April 12.—President R. O. McCulloch yesterday announced that the offer of the town council of $16,500 for poles and wires of the Gas Light Co. had been formally accepted. This paves the way for cheap light and power.

Dominion Steel Directors Meet.

Montreal, April 12.—The meeting of the Dominion Steel Co. directors yesterday was not productive of results. Mr. Plummer stated that no one on the board had even discussed the matter of dividend.

Capt. Tatlow Dead.

Vancouver, B.C., April 12.—Hon. Robt. G. Tatlow, formerly in the McBride Cabinet, who was thrown from his rig on Friday afternoon, striking his head on the stone pavement, died yesterday morning, not having regained consciousness.

He was an Irishman, 55 years of age. Educated in England, he came to the coast many years ago. In 1894, he was an unsuccessful candidate for the Legislature, but in 1900, was elected, and in subsequent contests. In 1903, he was appointed Minister of Finance and Agriculture.

Prior to last election, he resigned from the Government, owing to differences over the C.N.R. deal.

Piano Agent In Trouble.

Brockville, April 12.—In the Police Court yesterday George L. Riches faced the charge of converting to his own use money belonging to the Karn and Morris Piano & Organ Co. of Woodstock. Riches recently failed in business and the Karn Company, which he represented in Brockville, found customers who produced receipts for instruments on which small remittances had been made to them as rentals. There is a reported shortage of between $4,000 and $5,000.

Riches could not furnish two bondsmen for $500 each and was remanded for eight days.

Chapter XX

THE FIRST RIDE TOGETHER.

"We shall be leaving soon," said Armitage, half to himself and partly to Oscar. "It is not safe to wait much longer."

He tossed a copy of the Neue Freie Presse on the table. Oscar had been down to the Springs to explore and brought back news, gained from the stablemen at the hotel, that Chauvenet had left the hotel, presumably for Washington. It was now Wednesday in the third week in April.

"Oscar, you were a clever boy and knew more than you were told. You have asked me no questions. There may be an ugly row before I get out of these hills. I should not think hard of you if you preferred to leave."

"I enlisted for the campaign—yes? I shall wait until I am discharged." And the little man buttoned his coat.

"Thank you, Oscar. In a few days more we shall probably be through with this business. There's another man coming to get into the game. He reached Washington yesterday, and we shall doubtless hear of him shortly. Very likely they are both in the hills tonight. And, Oscar, listen carefully to what I say."

The soldier drew nearer to Armitage, who sat swinging his legs on the table in the bungalow.

"If I should die unshriven during the next week here's a key that opens a safety vault box at the Bronx Loan and Trust company, in New York. In case I am disabled, go at once with the key to Baron von Marhof, ambassador of Austria-Hungary, and tell him—tell him"—

He had paused for a moment as though pondering his words with care. Then he laughed and went on.

—"tell him, Oscar, that there's a message in that safety box from a gentleman who might have been king."

Oscar stared at Armitage blankly.

"That is the truth, sergeant. The message, once in the good baron's hands, will undoubtedly give him a severe shock. You will do well to go to bed. I shall take a walk before I turn in."

"You should not go out alone."

"Don't trouble about me. I shan't go far. I think we are safe until two gentlemen have met in Washington, discussed their affairs and come down into the mountains again. The large brute we caught the other night is undoubtedly on watch near by, but he is harmless. Only a few days more and we shall perform a real service in the world, sergeant. I feel it in my bones."

He took his hat from a bench by the door and went out upon the veranda. The moon had already slipped down behind the mountains, but the stars trooped brightly across the heavens. He drank deep breaths of the cool air of the mountain night and felt the dark wooing him with its calm and peace. He returned for his cloak and walked into the wood. He followed the road to the gate and then turned toward the Port of Missing Men. He had formed quite definite plans of what he should do in certain emergencies, and he felt a new strength in his confidence that he should succeed in the business that had brought him into the hills.

He gazed off through a narrow cut.

At the abandoned bridge he threw himself down and gazed off through a narrow cut that afforded a glimpse of the Springs, where the electric lights gleamed as one lamp. Shirley Claiborne was there in the valley, and he smiled with the thought of her, for soon—perhaps in a few hours—he would be free to go to her, his work done, and no mystery or dangerous task would henceforth lie between them. He walked quite to the brink of the chasm and laid his hand upon the iron cable from which swung the bridge.

"I shall soon be free," he said, with a deep sigh, and looked across the starlighted hills.

Then the cable under his hand vibrated slightly. At first he thought it the night wind stealing through the vale and swaying the bridge above the sheer depth. But still he felt the tingle of the iron rope in his clasp, and his hold tightened and he bent forward to listen. The whole bridge now audibly shook with the pulsation of a step—a soft, furtive step, as of one cautiously groping a way over the unsubstantial flooring. Then through the starlight he distinguished a woman's figure and drew back. A loose plank in the bridge floor rattled, and as she passed it freed itself, and he heard it strike the rocks faintly far below, but the figure stole swiftly on, and he bent forward, with a cry of warning on his lips, and snatched away the light barricade that had been nailed across the opening.

When he looked up his words of rebuke, that had waited only for the woman's security, died on his lips.

"Shirley!" he cried and put forth both hands and lifted her to firm ground.

A little sigh of relief broke from her. The bridge still swayed from her weight, and the cables hummed like the wires of a harp. Near at hand the waterfall tumbled down through the mystical starlight.

"I did not know that dreams really came true," he said, with an awe in his voice that the passing fear had left behind.

She began abruptly, not heeding his words.

"You must go away at once. I came to tell you that you cannot stay here."

"But it is unfair to accept any warning from you! You are too generous, too kind," he began.

"It is not generosity or kindness, but this danger that follows you. It is an evil thing, and it must not find you here. It is impossible that such a thing can be in America. But you must go. You must seek the law's aid."

"How do you know I dare?"

"I don't know that you dare!"

"I know that you have a great heart and that I love you," he said.

She turned quickly toward the bridge as though to retrace her steps.

"I can't be paid for a slight, a very slight, service by fair words, Mr. Armitage. If you knew why I came"—

"If I dare think or believe or hope"—

"You will dare nothing of the kind, Mr. Armitage!" she replied. "But I will tell you that I came out of ordinary Christian humanity. The idea of friends, of even slight acquaintances, being assassinated in these Virginia hills does not please me."

"How do you classify me, please—with friends or acquaintances?"

He laughed; then the gravity of what she was doing changed his tone.

"I am John Armitage. That is all you know, and yet you hazard your life to warn me that I am in danger?"

"If you called yourself John Smith I should do exactly the same thing. It makes not the slightest difference to me who or what you are."

"You are explicit!" he laughed. "I don't hesitate to tell you that I value your life much higher than you do."

"That is quite unnecessary. It may amuse you to know that, as I am a person of little curiosity, I am not the least concerned in the solution of—of—what might be called the Armitage riddle."

"Oh, I'm a riddle, am I?"

"Not to me, I assure you! You are only the object of some one's enmity, and there's something about murder that is—that isn't exactly nice! It's positively unaesthetic."

She had begun seriously, but laughed at the absurdity of her last words.

"You are amazingly impersonal. You would save a man's life without caring in the least what manner of man he may be."

"You put it rather flatly, but that's about the truth of the matter. Do you know, I am almost afraid"—

"Not of me, I hope"—

"Certainly not. But it has occurred to me that you may have the conceit of your own mystery, that you may take rather too much pleasure in mystifying people as to your identity."

"That is unkind—that is unkind," and he spoke without resentment, but softly, with a falling cadence. He suddenly threw down the hat he had held in his hand, and extended his arms toward her.

"You are not unkind or unjust. You have a right to know who I am and what I am doing here. It seems an impertinence to thrust my affairs upon you, but if you will listen I should like to tell you—it will take but a moment—why and what"—

"Please do not! As I told you, I have no curiosity in the matter. I can't allow you to tell me. I really don't want to know!"

"I am willing that every one should know—tomorrow—or the day after—not later."

She lifted her head, as though with the earnestness of some new thought.

"The day after may be too late. Whatever it is that you have done"—

"I have done nothing to be ashamed of. I swear I have not!"

"Whatever it is, and I don't care what it is," she said deliberately, "it is something quite serious, Mr. Armitage. My brother"—

She hesitated for a moment, then spoke rapidly.

"My brother has been detailed to help in the search for you. He is at Storm Springs now."

"But he doesn't understand"—

"My brother is a soldier, and it is not necessary for him to understand."

"And you have done this—you have come to warn me"—

"It does look pretty bad," she said, changing her tone and laughing a little. "But my brother and I—we always had very different ideas about you, Mr. Armitage. We hold briefs for different sides of the case."

"Oh, I'm a case, am I?" And he caught gladly at the suggestion of lightness in her tone. "But I'd really like to know what he has to do with my affairs."

"Then you will have to ask him."

"To be sure. But the government can hardly have assigned Captain Claiborne to special duty at M. Chauvenet's request. I swear to you that I'm as much in the dark as you are."

"I'm quite sure an officer of the line would not be taken from his duties and sent into the country on any frivolous errand. But perhaps an ambassador from a great power made the request—perhaps, for example, it was Baron von Marhof."

"Good Lord!"

Armitage laughed aloud.

"I beg your pardon! I really beg your pardon! But is the ambassador looking for me?"

"I don't know, Mr. Armitage. You forget that I'm only a traitor and not a spy."

"You are the noblest woman in the world," he said boldly, and his heart leaped in him, and he spoke on with a fierce haste. "You have made sacrifices for me that no woman ever made before for a man—for a man she did not know. And my life, whatever it is worth, every hour and second of it, I lay down before you, and it is yours to keep or throw away. I followed you halfway round the world, and I shall follow you again and as long as I live. And tomorrow or the day after I shall justify these great kindnesses, this generous confidence, but tonight I have a work to do."

As they stood on the verge of the defile by the bridge that swung out from the cliff like a fairy structure they heard far and faint the whistle and low rumble of the night train southbound from Washington, and to both of them the sound urged the very real and practical world from which for a little time they had stolen away.

"I must go back," said Shirley and turned to the bridge and put her hand on its slight iron frame, but he seized her wrists and held them tight.

"You have risked much for me, but you shall not risk your life again in my cause. You cannot venture across that bridge again."

She yielded without further parley, and he dropped her wrists at once.

"Please say no more. You must not make me sorry I came. I must go. I should have gone back instantly."

"But not across that spider's web. You must go by the long road. I will give you a horse and ride with you into the valley."

"It is much nearer by the bridge, and I have my horse over there."

"We shall get the horse without trouble," he said, and she walked beside him through the starlighted wood. As they crossed the open tract she said:

"This is the Port of Missing Men."

"Yes, here the lost legion made its last stand. There lie the graves of some of them. It's a pretty story. I hope some day to know more of it from some such authority as yourself."

"I used to ride here on my pony when I was a little girl and dream about the gray soldiers who would not surrender. It was as beautiful as an old ballad. I'll wait here. Fetch the horse," she said, "and hurry, please."

"If there are explanations to make"—he began, looking at her gravely.

"I am not a person who makes explanations, Mr. Armitage. You may meet me at the gate."

As he ran toward the house he met Oscar, who had become alarmed at his absence and was setting forth in search of him.

"Come; saddle both the horses, Oscar," Armitage commanded.

They went together to the barn and quickly brought out the horses.

"You are not to come with me, Oscar."

"A captain does not go alone. It should be the sergeant who is sent—yes?"

"It is not an affair of war, Oscar, but quite another matter. There is a saddled horse hitched to the other side of our abandoned bridge. Get it and ride it to Judge Claiborne's stables and ask and answer no questions."

A moment later he was riding toward the gate, the led horse following.

He flung himself down, adjusting the stirrups, and gave her a hand into the saddle. They turned silently into the mountain road.

"The bridge would have been simpler and quicker," said Shirley. "As it is, I shall be late to the ball."

"I am contrite enough, but you don't make explanations."

"No; I don't explain, and you are to come back as soon as we strike the valley. I always send gentlemen back at that point," she laughed and went ahead of him into the narrow road. She guided the strange horse with the ease of long practice, skillfully testing his paces, and when they came to a stretch of smooth road sent him flying at a gallop over the trail. He had given her his own horse, a hunter of famous strain, and she at once defined and maintained a distance between them that made talk impossible.

Her short covert riding coat, buttoned close, marked clearly in the starlight her erect figure. Light wisps of loosened hair broke free under her soft felt hat, and when she turned her head the wind caught the brim and pressed it back from her face, giving a new charm to her profile.

Mason Had Salt Rheum

ON HANDS FOR YEARS — COMPLETELY CURED FIVE YEARS AGO BY

DR. CHASE'S OINTMENT

There is nothing worse for eczema and salt rheum than cold water. For this reason many people are afflicted in cold weather only.

No class of men suffer more from such ailments than bricklayers and stone masons and this fact makes the accompanying letter particularly interesting.

Mr. John W. Naas, stone mason, of Lunenberg, N.S., writes: "I was a great sufferer from eczema and salt rheum for years and could get nothing which seemed to be of any real benefit. Five years ago I got a box of Dr. Chase's Ointment and three boxes of Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills and this treatment cured me so that the old trouble never returned. My skin became as soft and smooth as a child's after using Dr. Chase's Ointment and I shall always say a good word for it."

Very many people suffer from skin affections in the cold weather and try one thing after another without obtaining the marked and lasting benefit which comes with the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Chilblains and frost bites are quickly relieved and cured by the wonderfully soothing, healing influence of this Ointment. Chapped hands and irritated skin become soft and smooth. Each and every form of itching skin disease is thoroughly cured.

Could Not Sleep.

DOCTOR SAID HEART AND NERVES WERE RESPONSIBLE.

There is many a man and woman tossing night after night upon a sleepless bed.

Their eyes do not close in the sweet and refreshing repose that comes to those whose heart and nerves are right. Some constitutional disturbance, worry or disease has so debilitated and irritated the nervous system, that it cannot be quieted and causes nightmare, bad dreams, starting in the sleep, twitching of the muscles, restlessness, etc.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are a specific for all people troubled in this way. They have a soothing and calming effect on the nervous system.

Mrs. Calvin Stark, Rosmore, Ont., writes:—"About two years ago I began to be troubled with a smothering sensation at night when I would lie down. I got so bad I could not sleep in the dark, and would have to sit up and rub my limbs, they would become so numb. My doctor said my heart and nerves were responsible. I saw Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills advertised and got a box to try them. I took three boxes and can now lie down and sleep without the light burning and can rest well. I can recommend them highly to all nervous and run down women."

Privacy for Convict.

Guelph, April 12.—The first contingent of twenty convicts were transferred yesterday from the Central Prison, Toronto, to the site of the new provincial reformatory, near here. They were accompanied by Warden Gilmour and some other officials. Those brought up are "trustees" out on parole. They will be quartered in some of the buildings already on the grounds.

Jos. Downey, M.P.P., waxed wrathy with a Guelph newspaper man here yesterday, when the latter intimated that he had received a telegram from a Toronto paper, asking for details about the first contingent of convicts to arrive.

"Absurd, preposterous, shameful unscrupulous," were words in which the local member, himself an old newspaper man, described his opinion of the newspaper, or the reporter, who might even think of publishing anything about the convicts who are being put to work on the farm.

"If any newspaper man attempts to take pictures of these convicts at work he will have his camera smashed for his pains," went on Mr. Downey. "They are to be protected from the eyes of the curious just as though they worked behind stone walls."

AFTER SUFFERING TEN YEARS

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

MARLTON, N.J.—"I feel that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has given me new life. I suffered for ten years with serious female troubles, inflammation, ulceration, indigestion, nervousness, and could not sleep. Doctors gave me up, as they said my troubles were chronic. I was in despair, and did not care whether I lived or died, when I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; so I began to take it, and am well again and relieved of all my suffering."—Mrs. GEORGE JORDY, Box 40, Marlton, N.J.

Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotics or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials are on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., from women who have been cured from almost every form of female complaints, inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration. One Way of Dressing a Wife.

I wrote a poem to Lily's eyes—
That's now my wife's fall hat;
Another one to Cora's smile—
A dress she made of that.
My wife is named Maria Ann.
I'm fond of her, oh, yes,
But can't turn out a verse to her
That's suitable for dress!

Now, as she has a need for clothes,
For stockings, hats and shoes,
She quite agrees with me that there
Is not much time to lose.
So down I sit and write all day
To Maud's and Fanny's curls,
And that's the way I dress my wife—
On verse to other girls.
—Success Magazine.

An Efficient Mistress.

Mrs. A., who had a shiftless colored maid, was hurrying through her morning's work in order to go out with a friend in the afternoon. As she flew about from room to room she heard the colored woman chuckling to herself as if very much enjoying something. Impatiently she said:

"What in the world is it that amuses you so, Isabel?"

"Waal, Mis' Bessie, when I heard you gallopin' aroun' upstairs I jes' t'ought if you'd been de Lawd it wouldn't 'a' took you no six days to make de hebbens an' de yearth!"—Woman's Home Companion.

A Precious Thing.

Outside a gently rosy sheen
More beauteous than the glow serene
Which makes the orient pearl a thing
Fit for the favorite of a king,
And just within the colors play
Softly and swiftly as the ray
Which wakes the fire with sudden start
That dwells within the opal's heart.
And, further still, a ruby great
Glows in its lone but radiant state.
For explanation do you beg?
The simple answer is—an egg.
—Washington Star.

In the Lily Trade.

After a short search the man was discovered carefully painting the lily.

"Go to, thou fool!" sneered that majority which is ever the slave of tradition.

But the man explained. "This is a 1909 lily," he pointed out. "By painting it I make it the 1910 model. As soon as people see it they'll throw away their old lilies and buy new." And, lo, it was as he predicted.—Puck.

A Dollar Bill Remedy.

Rheumatism, measles, mumps,

Grouched or gloomy, feeling blue,
Dollar bill's the thing for you.
Scarlet fever, chilblains, pip,
It'll cure 'em, likewise grip.
—Baltimore Sun.

Modernism.

"Where are you going, my pretty maid?"

"I'm going first to Smith & Jones' to match a piece of ribbon, then to Jones & Smith's to get a dozen hairpins, next to Jones Bros.' to look at those darling little baby pins, after that to Smith Bros.' to look for some of those nice what-do-you-call-em's, and then to the hairdresser's, sir," she said. —Purple Cow.

ORIGIN OF SIGNS.

Every day we use remarkable signs in our writing without being aware that there is anything peculiar about them. Thus, we use various punctuation marks, abbreviations, figures, and what not, without a knowledge of what they really mean. For instance, there is the familiar note of exclamation (!). Why do we use this sign? The reason is that it represents the Latin exclamation "IO," which was used to signify a cry of joy. Therefore, to signify joy, or an exclamation, instead of writing the word, the Roman writers began to put the letter on top of one another. This, being rapidly written, gradually became so slurred that it took the form "!" which we use now.

In a similar way we arrived at that common sign the note of interrogation (?) This stands for the Latin word "Questio." This word was abbreviated, much in the same way as the other word, by putting the initial letter over the final letter, and this gradually took the familiar form of "?" In a similar way at this day we make many abbreviations. For instance, we use "o|c," meaning on account, and the contraction "a|c," which does not mean, as is commonly thought, account, but means account current, that is "running account." In the commercial world the expression "on a|c of" is often used, but is quite incorrect, the abbreviated form of account being "acct.," while the whole expression is so much simpler when represented "o|a."

The familiar contraction of ounce, "oz.," is the survival of a very old order of things. Of course, there is no "z" in ounce, and really the "z" is an old-fashioned way of expressing a semi-colon(;). In the early days of hand-writing the semi-colon (;) was generally used as a note of abbreviation, signifying the omission of any final syllable. So the word ounce would be written in a kind of shorthand, as "o;."

Quite similarly was the origin of that curious contraction, "viz.," meaning "namely." Very few people could say how we get at that abbreviation, for the Latin word for namely is "videlicet." The reason is that, as in the case of ounce, this was abbreviated to "vi;" then the "z" came in to represent the rapid form of writing the semi-colon, and we use the abbreviation without referring at all to the Latin word. It is really surprising the number of Latin words which we still use, especially in the form of contractions. For instance, we use "etc.," which is a contraction of et cetera, the Latin for "and so forth." This is sometimes represented by the sign "&c.," which brings to view another interesting contraction. The "&" is a sign which is known to printers as the ampersand, a term which is the corruption of the words "and per se and."

Really it is a sacred symbol for the cross, and the Emperor Justinian decreed that this symbol attached to a legal document should have the effect of an oath. We still use the curious expression "Sign your name," instead of saying "Write your name," this being a survival of those days when even cultured men had to make a sign, as they could not write their names.

The Height of Waves.

Measurements and estimates from mariners and observers at sea indicate that the average height of all the waves running in a gale in the open ocean is about twenty feet, but the height of the individual waves is often found to vary in the proportion of one to two, and there is, in fact, in a fairly regular sea a not inconsiderable range of size among the waves. In any statement as to the size of waves in a gale on the ocean one should not neglect the mention of the larger waves that occur at fairly frequent intervals. These, which may be termed the ordinary maximum waves, are perhaps what seamen really refer to when they state the size of the waves met with during a storm at sea. "About forty feet" is a common estimate of the height of the larger waves in a severe gale on the North Atlantic.

G. B. S. Was Astonished.

Mr. George Bernard Shaw is a great lover of music. He is a keen critic, and does not hesitate to voice his real opinions.

He was once invited by a friend to go and hear an Italian quartette of instrumentalists. He went, and sat throughout the performance with a stony countenance.

His friend, thinking to draw a little praise from him, remarked:

"You know, Mr. Shaw, these men have been playing together for twelve years."

"G.B." looked at him incredulously for a moment before he replied:

"Twelve years? Surely we have been here longer than that!"

The Jury System.

The jury as it is found to-day is a relic of the ancient popular justice. In the city states of antiquity the entire male population passed upon the guilt or innocence of the offending party. The oldest Greek poet has left us a picture of what the primitive jury was. The court is sitting; the question of "Guilty" or "Not guilty" is put, and the old men of the community in turn give their opinion, the rank and file of the people standing about applauding the opinion that strikes them most, the applause determining the decision. Gradually the jury became narrowed down in numbers until it finally appears as we see it to-day.

Municipal Family.

The village of Poin -sur-Velluire, in France, is a happy village—it does not know of political troubles, for all its municipal councillors are relatives. The village has 1,176 inhabitants and 358 electors. The mayor, M. Godin, is the uncle of the schoolmaster, as well as the uncle of the schoolmistress' husband, which same husband is also a municipal councillor; the deputy-mayor, M. Guerin, is first cousin of the mayor and of the schoolmaster and of the schoolmistress' husband. Another municipal councillor is first cousin of the mayor, and four others are second and third cousins, whilst the remaining councillor is second cousin and uncle of one of the other councillors.

COST OF SHIPPING WARS.

Prices Tumble When Big Lines Enter Into Struggle For Supremacy.

The negotiations between the British and German shipping companies trading to South and East Africa have fortunately been brought to a successful conclusion, consequently there is no possibility of a disastrous rate war between the rivals.

For some years past the Germans have had the trade on the East Coast of Africa almost entirely to themselves, and even the British Government has had to send stores to Mombasa and other ports for the foreign companies.

Such a state of affairs has not fostered British trade, and recently the Union Castle Line determined to extend their sailings right up the East Coast, calling at both Portuguese, German and British ports.

The German companies resented what they regarded as poaching on their preserves and at once announced their intention of carrying goods to South Africa at rates below those charged by the English lines.

Although passengers and traders may receive considerable benefit while a rate war is in progress, such methods of competition are very costly, and in the end the rival shippers usually come to terms and may even raise rates in excess of the old charges.

It may be remembered that in 1904 there was a fierce rate war in the Atlantic, and for several weeks it was possible to travel to Liverpool for only $10. Such a state of affairs could not last, as it was estimated that the British shipping lines alone were losing $150,000 a week, while the Germans lost even more heavily.

Then more recently the Germans made a dead set at the Cunard Co., resulting in a loss to the Hamburg-Amerika line of some $1,500,000 according to the Shipping Gazette. The position of the British company was stronger in the end than at the beginning of the war in spite of heavy losses.

The Germans are never afraid of waging wars against British firms, and it must be confessed that within recent years German shipping has increased by leaps and bounds. In fact the German flag is more in evidence in many Far Eastern ports than is the Red Ensign.

For two years the Hansa Co. of Bremen engaged in a freight war with the P. and O. line to India, which resulted in a reduction of its own dividend and much loss to the famous British company. However, the Germans stated that they had strengthened their position and had secured peace for some time to come. The directors considered a loss of 3 per cent. of their profits was not too much to pay for future possibilities.

Compulsory Buying of Bibles.

The first Bible printed in Scotland was issued in 1579. In the same year, by act of Parliament, every gentleman, householder and others "worth thrie hundrth merkis f yeirlie rent or abone," and every yeoman and burgess with $2,500, had to provide, under a penalty of $50, "a Bible and psalme buke in vulgare language in their houssis for the better instruction of thame selffis and their famellijs in the knowledge of God."

To see that the provisions of the above act were carried into effect, the following year a searcher was appointed with power to visit the houses of those signified by the act "and to require the sicht of thair Psalme Buikis and Bybillis." In a footnote it is added: "The Privy Council had in 1575 commanded and charged 'the principallis and Heidismen of euery parochin alsweill to Burgh as Landwart' to contribute and collect $25 for the purchase of a Bible to be placed in every parish kirk."

Wily Talleyrand.

Louis XVIII., complimenting Talleyrand one day upon his abilities, asked him how he had contrived first to overturn the directory and finally Bonaparte.

The wily diplomat replied, with charming simplicity: "Really, sire, I have had nothing to do with this. There is something inexplicable about me which brings ill luck on the Governments that neglect me."

THE WORKING MIND OF ROBERT WALKER

IT Earns Him $75,000 a Year as the Youngest of Railroad Presidents and He Illustrates the Value of Specialized Mental Method in Business and the Big Opportunities To-Day for Young Men to Fill Big Positions.

Fourteen Years of Steady, Earnest Training • • • Sent Mr. Walker Into the Rock Island Office

NEW YORK, Saturday.

FROM college in 1896 to the presidency of a transcontinental railroad in 1910, from a young lawyer's income to a salary of $75,000 a year—that is a remarkable advancement, extraordinary even in these days of sudden, swift promotion of young men from comparative obscurity into the limelighted tops of big corporations.

On January 12 of this year, at a directors' meeting in Chicago, Robert Walker, lawyer, only thirty-five years old, and recently connected with the offices of Paul D. Cravath, was elected president, general counsel and chairman of the Executive and Finance committees of the Rock Island Company, the holding concern of the extensive Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific system, with its 7,356 miles of track and an annual earning capacity exceeding sixty millions of dollars.

The high office, the young man, the unprecedented move, all combined, caused a great deal of interest in newspaper circles the country over. The Chicago papers in particular felt that there must be something back of the election. A big railroad coup was suspected, and a corps of expert interviewers swiftly descended upon the youthful president with urgent invitations to "tell all about it."

Mr. Walker did not refuse the interview, neither did he decline to talk. On the contrary, he conversed quite graciously, as is his custom, but he said nothing.

Whereupon the interviewers, still believing that they must be right and mindful of the new president's youth, met in conclave and issued a dictum.

"This young man must be disciplined," they agreed, and in consequence the morning papers appeared with lengthy accounts of the meeting, which accounts were purposely bare of any news about Robert Walker other than the mere mention of his name and office.

Evidently it was believed that the result would prove a sad blow to the young man, but apparently it proved otherwise. The youthful Mr. Walker, being a clever lawyer, well trained in the art of talking indefinitely, and being Mr. Walker, and being tremendously busy, continued to smile and say nothing.

Up to date, therefore, he has remained something of an enigma. The man in the street is still asking insistently some questions, highly pertinent not alone in the case of the successful Mr. Walker, but also to all other young men, and, indeed, to the whole great army of ambitious men who are knocking elbows today, in and out of New York, in the savage, stupendous rush of modern business life—the questions of "How did he get his start?" and "Why did they select him for the office?"

The answer—as I gathered it indirectly from an interview with Mr. Walker—throws some new and interesting lights upon modern conditions in this big building, fast moving age, and upon the men who are being developed up to the point of handling them.

The offices of the Rock Island company cover an entire floor in the United States Realty Building. Like other big corporation offices, they are soft carpeted, mahogany furnished, electric lighted, high ceilinged. Their atmosphere is one of silence, orderliness, wealth, power, decorum. Except for the "click, click" of a telegraph instrument in some inner distant room there is nothing whatever to remind one that they are really the executive offices of a great railroad, and not those, say, of a big law firm.

Psychologically, offices are interesting; they reflect for one thing the manner of men who preside over them and the kind of work they do. In this case the situation was significant.

The Rock Island Railroad has its nearest terminus at Chicago—a thousand miles away. From there it trunks and branches out till its glistening rails wind in and out of nearly one-third of all the States in the Union, as far west as New Mexico, north into the Dakotas and south to Louisiana. It is a wonderful system—so is every great trunk line—of thousands of miles of roadbed as a basis, and superimposed upon this foundation a marvellously intricate, interlocking fabric of men and metal, of steel, steam, brains and finger tips, all ramifying into a thousand and one daily details, each of which is governed hard and fast by an unbreakable rule.

A stupendous amount of work—work for trained minds—is given out daily by this ponderous machine. All that which pertains to operation goes no further east than Chicago and is settled there. The rest comes on to New York, to those solemn, dignified offices, far off from the dynamic roar and rattle of terminal and track.

It is a big balance that comes to New York and a weighty one. It embraces executive, financial, legal and the higher administrative problems, bulky but rarefied products of the wheels of the big Western railroad machine.

Out in the spacious anteroom, where I cooled my heels for some time, I saw office boys trotting in and out of doors with neat piles of correspondence, some as thick as a man's body. Men of administrative stamp came in and out carrying leather portfolios stuffed to bursting and were closeted in quick succession with the president.

Evidently there's a mass of highly important work to be done here in the brief business day. Some one man at the top must do it or direct it, rapidly and masterfully. However great a business becomes, there must always be that one man, the right kind of a man, at the top. In this instance the directors of the Rock Island selected a lawyer thirty-five years of age.

Why?

Mr. Walker arose from a busy desk, when at last I entered the president's room, and loomed well up behind it. He is several inches over six feet in height and sturdily built. He has a youthful buoyancy of manner and the round, clear eyes of a boy. He gives an impression of unusual alertness, steadiness, precision, decision. He's the kind of a man whom work never worries. Perhaps the most remarkable thing about him, in view of his youth and sudden success, is his utter lack of egotism, of self-consciousness. Evidently he is bigger than his position. A man must be to hold one well in hand.

Granted, then, that the modern day corporation requires at its head a veritable truck horse for work, we have here the prime requisites—namely, youth, physique, reserve power, steadiness. What else is needed?

The answer is—and that's the answer to the question of this man's achievement—a working mind.

Mr. Walker did not take credit to himself for having one. In fact, we arrived at a discussion of the subject only indirectly and after a number of inconsequential questions, which he answered good naturedly but with pen held in hand and eyes dropping impatiently now and then to a pile of letters which awaited his signature.

We were speaking of colleges—Mr. Walker is a graduate of Amherst, class of 1896—and their influence, good or bad, in fitting young men for success in this practical age. A good many self-made men of prominence have called the influence bad or, at least, unnecessary. Mr. Walker says otherwise.

"I regard a college training as a highly important factor," he said decisively, and then added enigmatically, "because of the vast multitude of things it enables you to forget." Mr. Walker dropped his pen and talked without prodding, for the first time in our interview. "It helps give you a working mind," he went on, "which is very necessary nowadays in this step lively, think lively age.

"Let me jump ahead a bit and explain by example what I mean.

"Take a leader in the legal profession, for instance, Joseph H. Choate.

"When Mr. Choate is to conduct a case it is his custom to jump into a cab with one or more lawyers who have spent weeks in searching out all of the details. The probability is that Mr. Choate knows little or nothing of the many points involved when he leaves his office, but his assistants do, and on the way to court they lay all these details before him, omitting none.

"Now, here's the point:—Mr. Choate's mind is such and so finely trained that he is able swiftly to absorb what he wants and to forget all the rest; forget it as swiftly and utterly so that he can concentrate altogether upon the essential, the telling points.

"Moreover—and this is important—he is able after the trial to forget the whole case, and so be fresh and ready for the same masterful procedure with a new one. It is often related of Mr. Choate that after the conclusion of a trial he will meet the opposing lawyer—say, in the evening at his club—and ask him what it was all about.

"Here is the apotheosis of the legal working mind. Consider what a vast amount of highly important work such a man can do and do successfully. He is naturally a leader, since his mind utilizes the work of other working minds less highly trained.

"So much for the great lawyer. Now, take the railroad president. L. F. Loree, president of the Delaware and Hudson Company, mentioned prominently as a successor to the late E. H. Harriman, is perhaps the best representative.

"Mr. Loree says that there are no new business problems. All have been previously and successfully worked out. Why waste time and mental energy in studying and analyzing them—why, above all, waste mental room in stuffing the mind with the facts concerned?

"'The one novelty to-day in the business world,' says Mr. Loree, 'is the knack of handling many business problems most successfully in the briefest possible time. There is a crying demand for minds trained to do this; and the way to produce such a working mind is to learn how to forget.'

"You will find, I believe, that all men to-day in high professional and business positions are well cultivated forgetters.

"By forgetting," continued Mr. Walker, "I mean, of course, forgetting temporarily. The human mind is so wonderfully constituted that every vivid impression is registered and retained. But the masterful mind is the kind that can give all its power to each problem, and then quickly pigeonhole the matter in a very small mental recess, there to hold it for future use but not for present usurpation.

"That is the ideal working mind, the kind that the big corporations of to-day demand of their chief officers. And," said Mr. Walker, "to go back to where we started, I believe that a college course is, perhaps, not always necessary, but highly important, at least in its development.

"Four years of earnest study at the age when the brain is forming helps most to make a working brain, just as mechanical apprenticeship makes skilful hands. You forget the things you learn—and it is best you should—but you don't forget the way you learned them.

"That is why I hold the old fashioned classical course above the modern and more technical college courses. The latter, it is held, fit a man at once for the workaday world, so that he can earn an immediate living in it. Perhaps that is true; but is it advisable to begin your life work with a mind stuffed stale with facts? And after all, the greater problem is, not how soon can a man start, but rather how high will he have gone ten years afterward.

"I simply claim that a working mind is a more valuable possession than a fact stuffed mind. The man with the former is fitted to rise above the practical man and direct the latter's knowledge and energies."

Four years in Amherst College, three years in Columbia University Law School, seven years in the Cravath law offices—fourteen years of steady, earnest training, with the goal ahead of a mind that can forget—this training sent Mr. Walker into the Rock Island office as assistant general counsel.

Robert Mather, then president, resigned later to enter the Important Interstate Commerce Commission. He was succeeded by H. A. Jackson, first vice president of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific. Upon the latter's resignation a man whose age was only thirty-five years, but who had spent fourteen of these years in the right way, stepped into a post previously filled by much older, thoroughly experienced men. He has acquired, despite his youth, that remarkable mental machine that the present day corporation must have to carry its burden of work.

There is another factor concerned—the legal training Mr. Walker had.

The legal profession to-day, as never before in its history, is proving an excellent stepping stone into big industrial positions. There are many examples, noteworthy among them Judge Gary, of the United States Steel Corporation, and Judge R. S. Lovett, the successor to E. H. Harriman. The list is very long, ranging from a number of trust and railroad presidencies down to minor and subsidiary companies whose names are not so well known, but whose chief executives are lawyers and receive handsome salaries.

The explanation is simple. There are so many restrictions to-day—imposed for the most part by recent government legislation—that the president of a corporation, trust or natural monopoly—or indeed of any big industrial concern—must either be a lawyer himself or else have a legal counsellor constantly at his elbow. This is particularly true of railroad corporations; so the law undoubtedly helped Mr. Walker up the ladder.

The fact that his father, Aldace F. Walker, of Vermont, was a prominent lawyer and railroad man—member of the first Interstate Commerce Commission and previously chairman of the Board of Directors of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad—may or may not have counted in the son's success. A. F. Walker died in 1901, two years after Robert Walker was graduated from law school. As for "pull" of any kind, it is freely admitted to-day, in view of the terrific exactions imposed upon the executive by the modern day corporation, that "pull" counts for absolutely nothing at all.

A working mind, trained like a finely organized machine to do and save a vast amount of mental labor, a physique calculated to stand easily the excessive mental strain, and youth—these are the great desiderata.

The Legal Profession • • • Is Proving an Excellent Stepping Stone Into Big Industrial Positions

Herein lies the answer to the question of "Why did they select him for president?"

It is only fair to Mr. Walker and his people to state that, far from seeking this interview, he did his best to avoid it, and he is not an easy man to interview.

When at length I said:—"That is all, thank you," the president, general counsel and chairman of the Finance and Executive committees of the Rock Island arose from his desk, escorted me to the door and opened it for me. It was a very pleasing courtesy, but more pleasing still is the fact that he did it quite unconsciously.

This lack of self-consciousness, standing out above and in spite of his remarkable success, ought to land Mr. Walker still higher among the small coterie of "well cultivated forgetters" who lead this country's activities.

It probably will.

LLOYD-GEORGE'S FIRST SUCCESS

High Handed Action of a Vicar Gave Him His Chance.

Perhaps there is not another man in present-day politics who has risen more rapidly than Mr. Lloyd-George. The son of a Unitarian schoolmaster of Liverpool, he lost his father at an early age, and was taken back to Wales by his mother and brought up a Baptist. An uncle superintended his education, taught him to love good books, and, in the end, saw him articled to a solicitor at Portmadoc. In Portmadoc he set up in business for himself, and it was not long before his chance came. The story is too long to be narrated here, but it centres round the action of a country vicar who refused the dying wish of a poor Nonconformist quarryman to be buried by the side of a beloved daughter, and had him interred instead in the portion of the graveyard reserved for suicides. The meanness of the act was the more glaring because the burial ground had been purchased and walled round by the subscriptions of Nonconformists. So incensed were the friends of the quarryman by the action of the vicar that they went to Lloyd-George for advice. He looked carefully into the vicar's legal position, and then advised the parishioners to force the gate of the graveyard, if refused admission, and to dig up and re-inter the quarryman. This was done. An action for trespass followed, with fines; then a reference to the county; and finally an appeal to the High Court of Justice out of which Mr. Lloyd-George came with flying colors. As a speaker Mr. Lloyd-George is a model of clearness and force, of ready wit and dry, humorous allusions. He is not afraid of telling a joke, even though it may be against himself, as, for instance, when he recounts how at one of his meetings, at which there was a question of replying to some statements of a certain bishop, a Welsh deacon introduced him by saying that, in his opinion, that bishop was one of "the biggest liars in creation; but," he added, "thank God, we have a match for him to-night."

Gipsy's Remarkable Omen.

The Archduke Joseph, a distant relative of the Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria, belonged to a branch of the Hapsburgs, which had been settled in Hungary for more than a century. He was the great protector of the local gipsies, hence his name, "The Gipsy Archduke," and he popularized the Tzigane music by arranging many of their tunes in scores for orchestras. During the Prussian-Austrian war of 1866, on the night of July 23, before the battle of Sadowa, a division commanded by the archduke, retreating before the Prussian army, had bivouacked near a town in Bohemia facing north. At midnight, the archduke, when resting in a peasant's cottage, was awakened by the arrival of a gipsy, who insisted on seeing him personally, having come to report the advance of the enemy. The archduke who spoke Romani fluently, asked, "How do you know? Our outposts have not reported any movement." "That your highness, is because the enemy is still some way off." "Then how do you know?" The gipsy, pointing to the dark sky, lighted by the moon, observed, "You see those birds flying over the woods from north to south?" "Yes, what of them?" "Those birds do not fly by night unless disturbed, and the direction of their flight indicates that the enemy is coming this way." The archduke put his division under arms, and reinforced the outposts, which in two hours' time were attacked heavily.

Mr. Kipling, Sign-Writer.

Mr. Kipling, who has traveled much in South Africa, was a personal friend of Mr. Cecil Rhodes, and on one occasion went to stay with the latter on one of his fruit-farms.

One morning Mr. Rhodes went round the farm before breakfast, leaving his less energetic friend behind. Time passed, and the host did not return, so the novelist got busy.

As Mr. Rhodes came back towards the house he found placards on the trees bearing such legends as "Feed us," "We are starving," "Famine," etc.

Then in the house the notices got larger: "Why die, when a little breakfast will prolong life?" And, in still larger lettering: "It is late," "It is still later."

They led at last to the breakfast-room, where sat Kipling, their author, reading his paper in peace, but very hungry.

Candlemas Day.

On the second day of February comes Candlemas Day, which was at one time observed as religiously as Christmas, and like most festival days, had its origin in religious rites and ceremonies. Among the superstitious in those ancient days to burn candles on this day was supposed to ward off evil spirits for the ensuing year. The candles used in the religious ceremonies were symbolical of our Lord being the "Light of the World." In these modern times the observances of Candlemas rank with those of Halloween. Young man and maidens may enquire of their matrimonial future by burning candles. Each being supplied with a tiny candle, lighted by its owner, the owner stands back three paces and endeavors to blow out the flame with as few puffs as possible — for each attempt denotes a year's delay in the wedding.

We've Got the Men.

It does not seem that there will be any lack of officers for the new Canadian navy. It was announced in the House the other day that there were already 234 applications in. And there hasn't been a keel laid yet.—Woodstock Sentinel-Review.

WINTER IN JAMAICA.

West Indian Island Is a Paradise Just Now.

It is a wonderful experience to sail from dull skies to cloudless blue, to leave a cold country and to arrive in a fairyland of tropical verdure, a green island set in an azure sea. We set out in grey, autumn weather, and in a week we are in summer; another week, and we are entering Kingston harbor, in the pure air of early morning. The blue mountains rose behind the town, and all along the shore are red-roofed houses, half concealed among tropical trees and plants. In Kingston one sees signs of the earthquake; here are houses partially rebuilt, others in ruins. But over all a bright sun shines, electric trams are running, and the streets are lively with passers-by, white, black, and colored.

Up country the cactus and the cocoanut palm are much in evidence, and the railway passes through plantations of bananas, with their great leaves and bunches of fruit. After we alight the country becomes still more interesting. Imagine a road of a bright red-brick color, bordered by vivid green banks — a road which winds among cone-shaped hills covered to their summits with "bush." On either side are orange trees laden with fruit, feathery bamboos, coffee trees, and here and there a poinsettia, with its flaming crimson leaves. Suddenly we turn a corner and meet a group of people with shining black eyes and light garments. It is market day, and they all carry produce on their heads. Some have a pile of yellow oranges, others bring bananas, yams, and plantains. We arrive at our destination just before the beginning of the torrential rains, which flood the island for the next ten days.

Communication with the outside world is cut off, the cable is suspended, the railway is damaged, no letters are received, and we resign ourselves to the study of tropical rain, which descends in a deluge and never ceases for a week. But the welcome sun at length returns, the country glows in freshness and beauty, and the days pass, leaving their impress on the mind, a series of pictures, blue and green and gold. Then there are nights as bright as day, when the cocoanut leaves shine like silver arrows in the moonlight, and we seem to be in a wonderland of light and shadow, a fairyland of witching beauty. On a night of starry heavens, in which Mars glows darkly red and Venus gleams magnificently. Christmas Day arrives, with a temperature of 80 degrees and a fresh and welcome breeze. Santa Claus fills our stockings as at home, we have a Christmas tree adorned with wool for snow, and we dance and sing "Auld Lang Syne" with a gaiety and fervor quite the equal of that of any gathering in Scotland. But is it December? Is it not rather June? Surely, it is not Christmas, but Midsummer Day!—J. R. S., in Montreal Standard.

The Youngest Admiral.

Captain David Beatty will shortly have the distinction of being the youngest rear-admiral in the British navy. His forthcoming promotion at the early age of thirty-eight has been the subject of a special Order in Council.

To qualify for promotion under the regulations a captain must have served during peace time for a total period of six years. The Admiralty petition sets forth that, owing to the abnormal shortening of the time on the captains' list, it is anticipated that Captain Beatty will reach his turn for promotion before he completes the full period of six years.

It is also pointed out that he was severely wounded in action in China, and was consequently prevented from receiving an appointment for a considerable period.

In these circumstances the Order directs that Captain Beatty shall be promoted to flag rank in his turn, notwithstanding the regulations.

Peer's Cricket Achievements.

There is probably no Irish landlord who is more popular with his tenants than Lord Barrymore, whose sixty-seventh birthday was celebrated a short time ago. When he was only six years of age his lordship accompanied his father on a driving tour through Europe. Two carriages were used, and the journey lasted three years. This tour enable him to see a great deal of France and Italy, as well as of Switzerland and Germany. Driving tours were then by no means void of danger, for even on the roads between Rome and Naples people were often held up by brigands and robbed. On returning home Lord Barrymore was sent to a private school, where among his fellow pupils were Lord Dunraven, Lord Meath, the late Lord Dunmore, and Sir Herbert Maxwell.

Swallowing the Dice.

Excessive gaming has always been prohibited by law, and in the time of Henry VII. archery was the only game of any kind that was not unlawful in England. The gaming laws are, of course, far stricter now than they were in the early years of the last century, but, says T. P.'s London Weekly, even at that time police "raids" on gambling houses were frequent enough, and it is said that at one or two of the west end establishments persons were retained "whose sole duty lay in being able to swallow the dice in case of a raid by the police."

Fogged.

When Queen Wilhelmina was a child her governess, an Englishwoman, once ordered her to draw a map of Europe as punishment for some slight offence. When the map was finished Holland was depicted as an enormous country, sprawling over the whole continent, and the British Isles were invisible. "But where is England?" the governess inquired. "That dot there in the corner," was the disdainful reply. "But I can't see it at all," the governess persisted. "No, you can't," admitted Wilhelmina. "You see it's always hidden by fog!"

Gave Macdonald His Shilling.

Sergt. Harrison, who bore a measure of fame in the army as the man who enlisted the late Gen. Sir Hector Macdonald when he joined the Gordon Highlanders, as a private, has just died at Trandat.

Does things other Ranges cannot do

The Most Convenient Range in the World

In the Champion Interchangeable you can use coal alone, wood alone, or gas alone. You can use coal or wood and gas at the same time. You cannot do this with any other range. Champion also has a closed top for cooking with natural gas.

There cannot be an explosion in the Champion. You light the burners direct. The oven burner cannot be lighted until the door is open. No other gas range is so absolutely safe.

Ordinary gas ranges use the oven for keeping the dishes warm. The Champion has a warming closet.

Champion INTERCHANGEABLE GAS, COAL & WOOD Range

You can change the Champion from a gas range to a coal or wood range in three seconds. And while building a coal fire you can use gas under two pot holes and the broiler burner.

When the coal fire is burning you can still use gas on two top burners and broiler burner in oven, which is an invention worth while. Truly the Champion Interchangeable Steel Range does things other ranges cannot do.

The Champion will cost you about the same as a high-grade steel range. It can be supplied with two extra burners on right hand end, or an instantaneous water heater, or a reservoir heated by gas.

The Champion takes the place of two ranges, thus saving room in the kitchen. Considering these facts it is the best range investment in the world.

The demand for the Champion Interchangeable is already very large. There may be a scarcity later on. So we advise you to go to our agent and see this remarkable new range at once.

A booklet explaining the Champion fully will be mailed to you free if you will write to our nearest office. 57

A Grand Old Scientist.

Dr. Alfred Russel Wallace, who has just passed his eighty-seventh birthday, may not unappropriately be described as the "Grand Old Man" of science. He was the co-discoverer with Darwin of the theory of evolution, though, curiously enough, the idea was suggested, in both instances, by a study of Malthus' "Essay on Population." It was in 1858, while suffering from an acute attack of ague at Ternate, that it suddenly occurred to Wallace that the "positive checks" which, as Malthus pointed out, tended to restrict the growth of communities, must act even more effectively on the lower animals. "There suddenly flashed on me," he afterwards wrote, "the idea of the survival of the fittest, and in the two hours that elapsed before the ague fit was over I had thought out the whole of the theory." Wallace then wrote it down, and sent it by the next post to Darwin, asking him to forward it to Lyell. Darwin was almost too astonished for words.

May Make Mistake.

Of course, no Canadian could complain if protection were given to the English and Irish farmer against Canada. Our fellow-citizens of the United Kingdom have a right to do what they think best for themselves. But we may have cause to be sorry if we egg them on restricting the great free market in which we are doing so well.—Star, Toronto.

Amputated Leg of Deer.

With a limb broken as a result of its wild scamperings about the wooded land of High Park, Toronto, one of the doe deer had to submit to an operation at the hands of Veterinary Surgeon Mole, recently. Hoping that the broken limb could be set the doctor placed it in a bandage of plaster of Paris, but gangrene set in and the limb had to be amputated.

A Queer Accident.

An extraordinary accident took place in Dublin the other day. Geo. Crowe, a timber laborer, while taking shelter from a severe shower in one of the sheds on the quay, was leaning against a door looking out, when a cart which drew up alongside the shed caught the door and caused it to close, crushing Crowe's head against the shed. The ambulance was immediately telephoned for, but the unfortunate man died before its arrival. His skull had been badly fractured.

Had a Bad Cough For a Number of Years.

Was Afraid of Consumption.

Mrs. A. E. Brown, Ottawa, Ont., writes "I have had a very bad cough every winter for a number of years which I was afraid would turn into consumption. I tried a great many remedies but only received temporary relief until I got a bottle of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, and after taking two bottles my cough was cured. I am never without a bottle of Norway Pine Syrup."

Too much stress cannot be laid on the fact that when a person catches cold it must be attended to immediately or serious results may follow.

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is the medicine you need. It strikes at the foundation of all throat and lung complaints, relieving or curing all Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Croup, Asthma, Sore Throat, etc., and preventing Pneumonia and Consumption.

So great has been the success of this wonderful remedy it is only natural that numerous persons have tried to imitate it.

MONTREAL, April 11.—(Special.)—At the Montreal Stocks Yards West End Market receipts last week were 2080 cattle, 250 sheep and lambs, 1650 hogs and 2500 calves, and offerings this morning were 800 cattle, 75 sheep and lambs, 500 hogs and 500 calves.

A feature of the trade continues to be the strong undertone to the market. Cattle prices have scored a further advance of 25c per cwt. since this day week, attributed to active demand for cattle in the Toronto market from American exporters, there being fully one hundred carloads shipped thru here last week for export via United States ports.

Cables from Liverpool on Saturday were stronger and noted a further advance in prices of ½c per lb., with sales of Canadians at 14½c to 14¾c per lb., but advices from London were weaker, and the average price realized for Canadians and Americans was ½c per lb. lower than a week ago.

Sales of some extra choice, heavy steers were made to-day at 7c; choice at 6¾c to 6¾c; good at 6¼c to 6½c; fairly good at 5½c to 6c; fair at 5½c to 5¾c; medium at 4¾c to 5c, and common at 4c to 4½c per lb. Among the offerings there were some very heavy choice bulls, for which holders were asking as high as 5¾ to 6¼c per lb. Hog prices were steady. The supply was not plentiful, but ample for all requirements, and sales of selected lots from Toronto were made at $10.50, and from east of Toronto at $10 to $10.25. Supplies of calves were small and demand good, and sales were made at from $2 to $5 each. The market for sheep and lambs was very quiet, as few are coming forward. Sheep sold at 6c per lb., and lambs at from $4 to $8 each.

East Buffalo Cattle Market.

EAST BUFFALO, April 11.—Cattle—Receipts, 2600 head; active; 25c to 40c higher; prime steers, $8 to $8.65; shipping, $7 to $7.75; butchers, $6.75 to $7.40; heifers, $5.50 to $7.25; cows, $3.25 to $6.25; bulls, $4.50 to $6.25; stockers and feeders, $4.75 to $6; stock heifers, $4.50 to $5; fresh cows and springers active and $5 to $5 higher, $30 to $70.

Veals—Receipts, 2000 head; active and 25c higher, $6 to $8.75.

Eight Thousand Settlers Come In at Portal This Month.

Winnipeg, April 12.—Never in the history of Canada have there been such sights witnessed at any Canadian port of entry as are seen daily at Portal, where a vast throng of American emigrants are crowding into Canada. Sunday three train-loads of effects, comprising sixty cars, came in, which is just about the average of each day. Accompanying these were 350 settlers en route to their homesteads. Included in their effects were eleven hundred horses and a large number of cattle. During March six thousand colonists came in, and at least eight thousand more will come during the present month. The great difficulty which the settlers have had through the absolute lack of water has been solved by the C.P.R. taking in a trainload of water daily to supply the stock.

The officials of the railways and the Immigration Department estimate that if there is a good crop this year, next season more people will come in through Portal alone from the United States than came in through all the ports in 1909.

Aetna's Dust in the Indies.

New York, April 12.—Clouds of fine volcanic dust are floating over West Indian waters, which Capt. Dickinson and crew of the steamship Avon, in yesterday from the West Indies, believe came from the eruption of Mount Aetna and were blown over the Atlantic.

Saved Woman From Death.

Woodstock, April 12.—The spectacle of a deaf woman, Mrs. C. McGinnis, walking unconcernedly ahead of a C.P.R. freight train which was desperately trying to stop, gave William Elliott, jr., a chance to display his presence of mind.

It was such a close call that Elliott's sleeve as he pulled the woman away was brushed by the engine which was brought to a standstill fifty feet further on.

THE WHITE SLAVE TRAFFIC AND OUR CHILDREN

Rev. J. A. McCuaig Gives a Most Impressive Address at Saint Andrew's Presbyterian Church Last Night.

"SEX AND CRIME" TO-NIGHT

Probably the most outspoken lecture on the sex question ever given before an audience in a local church was delivered last night at St. Andrew's by Rev. Mr. McCuaig of New York, who, as announced previously, is here for a special series of educational and religious discourses on the greatest problem which confronts civilization at the present time—that of social impurity. "The White Slave Traffic and our Children," was Mr. McCuaig's topic, and at the commencement of his address he said there was no great problem in life that could be successfully approached and dealt with from any standpoint other than the standpoint of God, and it was in this light that the speaker treated his subject. If dealt with any other way he stated wrong conclusions would be arrived at and wrong inferences drawn.

The white slave traffic was the illicit traffic in alien women. This was, however, only a small phase of the question of prostitution. Personally, he was convinced that with the present organization not two per cent. of the moral outcasts of this great army of degeneracy could be reached. He questioned if there were any great churches whose doors would be swung open to receive them in the large cities. But if they were practically beyond redemption the speaker would make an appeal for the 500,000 little girls who might later on be called to take the place of these fallen women in America. We stood between the ranks of the fallen and the innocents to save the latter if possible. The false education of the children in the matter of sex was responsible for most of the vice of social impurity.

We were instinctively fathers and mothers and the fulness of our lives was realized when God blessed us with little children. Our children were the windows through which we gazed and widened our sympathies until we became fathers and mothers of the children of the whole world.

A child was the germ of eternal destiny and it was the responsibility of parents to properly direct that germ. The sex passion was the imperial passion of the human race and the children should be enlightened upon this as well as on the other attributes to which they are heirs. They should be made known of the terrible results of the prostitution of this passion and the great blessing of its God-given employment.

The speaker deplored the fact that so many homes of this continent were barring children and that race suicide had become a heinous menace to the development of the race.

In conclusion it was emphasized that children were impressionable and the means by which they learned things had a large influence on their conception of them. The greatest influence in the white slave traffic were men who had grown from improperly educated boys. Mothers and fathers were making a tremendous contribution to the evil world when they neglected to explain to their children the mysteries of the sex question, and of the saving grip of the faith in Jesus Christ.

"ST. ELMO"

Readers of Augusta J. Evans' famous novel "St. Elmo," and they are legion, will be interested in the announcement that Grace Hayward's authentic dramatization is to be presented at the Grand Opera House, next Saturday, April 16th, matinee, and evening.

The play is one of the genuine successes of the year. This is not surprising as the book has long been recognised as a standard of fiction. It was written many years ago, but is equally as popular as in our grandparents' time. In fact, booksellers say that the sales for the past three years have exceeded that of any recent work of fiction. It has been translated in a dozen languages and although typically American in thought and action, has a tremendous vogue abroad.

Miss Hayward's dramatization adheres very closely to the story of the book, and to this is probably due, in a large measure, the instantaneous success of the play.

In point of box office receipts and public interest, "St. Elmo" has been a surprise to everyone. It has offered additional proof, if, indeed, any was needed, that American play-goers want a wholesome, well-told story, and will take it every time in preference to risque importations.

Newspaper Man Saves A Runaway

A horse attached to a milk waggon, the outfit belonging to Mr. J. J. McCrea, attempted a fast getaway on Hunter street in front of the Oriental Hotel at noon to-day. The wild dash of the steed was brought to a close when Mr. A. C. Yokome, a local newspaperman, rushed from the sidewalk, jumped on the back of the waggon and secured the lines. A large number of persons witnessed the thrilling act and the horse was cheered loudly when he was brought to a stop. Mr. Yokome received an ovation from the barbers, furniture men, hotel clerks, newsboys, and others along the street, and gracefully responded by raising his hat and modestly retiring.

BANKER MISSING

Young Bank Clerk Took His Razor and Bathing Suit—Mother Fears the Worst.

Special to The Examiner:

Windsor, Ont., April 11.—Crombie Munro, aged 24, clerk in the National Bank of Commerce, Detroit, has been missing from his boarding house, on Cass Avenue, Detroit, since last Friday night, and it is feared he has committed suicide. Munro, who is a Canadian and a son of Rev. Geo. Munro, formerly a Toronto clergyman, has been evincing much melancholia of late. Last Friday afternoon the young man left his Cass Avenue room, taking with him a bathing suit and his razor. Nothing has since been seen of him, and Mrs. Munro, the mother, who arrived here from Toronto Saturday to visit her son, believes he has cut his throat and thrown himself into the river.

Crombie is described as about 5 feet 6 inches tall, thin face, smooth shaven, light hair and complexion, and weighed about 150 pounds.

WEDDING BELLS

WHYTE—ROBB.

Edmonton Bulletin: On Thursday evening, March 29th, a pretty but quiet wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Robb, Lloydminster, Alberta, when their only daughter, Nellie Wilson, was united in holy bonds of matrimony to Frederick S. Whyte, son of John Whyte, Norwood, Ontario. The ceremony was performed by Rev. W. J. Wilson, Lloydminster. The bride was given away by her father. She was attired in a dress of pongee, trimmed with embroidered net and pipings of old rose and fawn silk and carrying a bouquet of cream roses, and ferns. After hearty congratulations were extended, all retired to the dining room and did justice to a very delicious tea prepared by the hostess. The table was beautifully decorated with pink and white carnations and ferns. Mr. and Mrs. Whyte left on the evening train for Edmonton and in a short time will leave on an extended trip to Montreal and Toronto, and other parts throughout Eastern Canada. The bride's travelling suit was of blue serge with mohair trimmings and hat to match.

GYPSIES ARE IN TROUBLE

NOW UNDER ARREST

Apparently the same band of gypsies who were in trouble here and in Ottawa last June, have been again heard from. This time it is in Montreal, to which city, the daughter of the chief and a young man, with whom she eloped, went, taking with her $1,000 of her father's money. The following despatch from Montreal says:

Montreal, April 11.—On the charge of stealing $1,000 from her father, Mrs. Steven Stevens, to use the English name of the gypsy bride of Izra Kovaneska, will be returned to Nepean, Carleton County, Ont. William H. Hamilton, high constable for that county, arrived in the city to-day, armed with a warrant for her arrest. She will be accompanied by her young husband. Her father, Stanley McGill, chief of the gypsy tribe, with headquarters in the State of New York, who arrived here Saturday, says that when his daughter eloped with Stevens she took away $1,000 from the treasury of the tribe. As she was his oldest daughter she was entrusted with the funds and had no difficulty in obtaining the money. She left $600 behind her.

The alleged theft and the elopement took place in Nepean last November just previous to the camps going into winter quarters. During the summer the McGill and the Kovaneska tribes had camped in proximity. Just before the departure for winter quarters the young people were missed. Chief McGill instituted a search at once, but only succeeded last week in locating the young people. They were then at Rockfield, near Lachine, where the Koveneska tribe had passed the winter. Chief McGill told his daughter that if she were willing to return home with him he would drop all charges against her, and she would be freed, otherwise he would prosecute. She scornfully repudiated his offer and went back to her cell. A telegram from her mother was read to the young woman by her father. It was as follows: "Bring daughter home at once if willing to come; and if not willing to come give her five years in jail."

Chief McGill says under no circumstances will he allow his daughter to return to the Koveneska tribe.

Young Koveneska who will some day be chief in his own tribe, says the thousand dollars is only a pretext to get her back.

JACK TOFT IN COURT

Once Famous Catcher of Toronto Eastern League Team Arrested on a Charge of Abusing His Wife—He is Not the Idol of Yore

WAS BOUND AT $300

Special to The Examiner.

Toronto, April 12.—Jack Toft, once the idol of Toronto baseball fans, appeared in police court this morning, charged with ill-treating his wife. Whiskey seemed to be at the bottom of the trouble. "He threatened to do away with the baby," said Mrs. Toft, and it was further stated that he had been abusing his wife for six months. He was bound over on $300 bail to keep the peace. No one appeared to go security and in the meantime Toft went to the down cells.

A Lighting System For "Stoney Lake"

The Stoney Lake Navigation Company completed arrangements yesterday for the installation of a complete lighting service for the steamer Stoney Lake, the flag ship of their fleet. The "Stoney Lake" will be equipped with a powerful search light, and also will be illuminated with sixty incandescent lamps. The improvements will be appreciated by the patrons of the steamer.

EIGHT-DAY RACING

Hamilton, April 12.—If the owners of Fort Erie and Windsor racing plants do not see their way clear to agree to a limitation of Canadian race meets to eight days each, it is probable that the Toronto, Hamilton and Montreal Clubs will sever their connections with the Racing Association as at present constituted. Members of the three leading jockey clubs hold opinion that if horse racing is to live in Canada some radical change must be made.

DOUBLE CHARGE

Italian Who Killed Two Fellow Countrymen in a Fit of Drunken Frenzy, is Being Much Petted by the People of Cobourg.

CANNOT SPEAK ENGLISH

Cobourg, April 11.—There are not a few, but many citizens who express sorrow for the lot of the hapless Italian, George Manuro, who, during the court, which opened here to-day before Mr. Justice Teetzel, will be called to face a double charge of murder. He has a wife and family in Sunny Italy, who tarried patiently there while he came to Canada to secure the competence that was to make their future lives easy. Now, confinement for a term of years the extreme penalty which may be his doom—a terrible price for the work of a few moments. The story of the shooting, which took place at the Italian construction camp on the C. N. R. near Grafton, is familiar to the public. It is said that Manuro and his friend, Frank Marano, had been drinking together. A dispute arose and Manuro, in frenzied haste, rushed for his rifle. Lombardi held the door of his shack, a shot riddled his arm and struck Cionflore, who was behind him, in the abdomen. The latter was brought to the hospital here and died the day after the tragedy. Frank Marano fell pierced by rifle ball, mortally wounded and expired soon after in his wife's arms. Manuro fled from the camp, and was arested at Colborne, about eight miles east of Grafton. He was brought to the hospital here and identified by the dying Cionflore. Charged with a terrible crime, and only able to make his statements to the court through an interpreter, his condition is a pitiable one. Mr. E. A. DuVernet, K.C., Toronto, is the Crown counsel. Besides the shooting tragedy there are three other criminal cases and six civil cases on the docket.

WE WONDER?

Has Peterborough been the first to see Halley's comet?

Some train men and others that go on duty at an early hour in the morning, had their attention drawn to a suspicious object in the Eastern sky. It was a long, peculiar band of light, nearly opposite to where the sun rises, and stretching towards the west.

Many will, no doubt, watch for it to-morrow.

CHANGING SENTIMENT

Oliver Goldsmith's "Deserted Village"

Goldsmith in his "Deserted Village" spoke of a certain chapel where those who "went to scoff, remained to pray." So in life one often laughs at what he does not understand and later, when he does understand, his laugh turns to praise. There were some who doubted the merits of Newbro's "Herpicide," the scalp germicide and hair-dressing; but since they have tried it, they are now among its best friends and strongest endorsers. Herpicide kills the germ that eats the hair off at the root, and the hair then grows again. As a hair dressing it is incomparable, try it. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich.

GOT A WEEK TO SETTLE

At the police court this morning Harry Harding, who was arrested in Port Hope on a charge of stealing $30 and a gold watch from a roommate at the Foster House, appeared before Magistrate Dumble and was allowed to go for a week in order to give him an opportunity of restoring the money to its owner. He will appear again a week from to-day.

Honoured By Buglers On His Departure From City

A pleasing event took place at the Armouries last night when the members of the Bugle Band said farewell to Bugler Amos McWilliams, who leaves to-morrow for Fort William, where he has accepted a good position. Mr. McWilliams has been most popular with the 57th Buglers and it was with sincere regret that they learned of his intended departure from the city. Last night he was presented with a handsome gold locket and an address, the presentation being made by Sergt. Bugler, W. Sharpe, while Bugler Geo. East read the following address:

Peterborough, April 11, 1909.

Dear Amos,—It was with deepest feelings of regret that we the members of the Bugle Band, learned of your decision to leave the city. We feel that we cannot let the opportunity pass without expressing to you our appreciation of your pleasant and agreeable disposition which was always shown while with us. We hope that you will soon make as many friends in your new home as you are leaving behind you in Peterborough. We ask you to accept this locket as a small token of our esteem which we trust will always serve to remind you of your many well wishing friends in the Bugle Band who join in wishing you every success.

Signed on behalf of the Bugle Band, G. Butcher, B. Mills, E. Mein, S. Gibbs, W. Sharpe, Bugler Sergt., M. Drysdale, G. East, A. Wert, P. A. Weatherstone, A. Rae, C. Thornton, G. Huffman, C. Waram, T. Hanwell, J. Seymour, W. Fitzgerald, A. Rew.

COUNSEL FOR DR. YOUNG PRESS FOR SETTLEMENT OF THE LATTER'S ACCOUNT AGAINST THE CITY

Mr. D. O'Connell, on behalf of Dr. Young, waited upon the Board of Health, at their regular meeting this morning and asked that the Board again recommend to the Council the payment of Dr. Young's account. He pointed out that the city was obliged to pay any moneys expended in the work of the Board of Health. Dr. Young had performed considerable service and in the opinion of the Board was entitled to the money, the request to pay it having been made to the City Council. The city refused to comply. The act provides that the city treasury must pay any moneys requested by the Board of Health. While Dr. Young was acting for Dr. Bingham at the time, he performed services outside of the regular duties of the Medical Health Officer.

While it was the general opinion of the Board that Dr. Young was entitled to some remuneration, it was decided that he should prepare an itemized statement of his account, and present it to the Board at the next meeting.

Those present at the meeting this morning, were Dr. McNulty, chairman, Drs. Young, and Burnham and James Edgar.

Mr. Hickey of the north end of the city waited on the Board and asked that a sewer be built on Aberdeen Ave. There were several cess pools there now. The Board instructed him to get the necessary petition properly signed and in case he couldn't, then the Board would take action.

Dr. McPherson stated that under the new by-law he had to vaccinate at regular intervals. He wanted the Board to authorize the time, the place and who should be vaccinated. The matter was left in the hands of the Medical Health Officer and the chairman.

The Board then adjourned.

MAY MAKE A RETURN TO TENDER SYSTEM

City Board of Works Discuss the Advisability of Making a Change in the Method of Constructing Sewers.

IS DONE BY DAY LABOUR

There is a probability that the city council will resort to the tender system of constructing the sewers in the city. For the past three years they have been done by day labour under the supervision of the city engineering department. The question was considered by the Board of Works last night, and a resolution was passed recommending the Council to revoke the rule made three years ago, that all sewers should be built by day labour. The committee was not unanimous on the matter, three voting for and two against the motion to make a recommendation to the Council to ask for tenders for sewer construction.

Those present were. Ald. Hicks, chairman; Aldermen Duffus, Phelan, Graham, Duncan and Metheral.

A Nest Egg.

There is about $4.000 to the credit of the city as a result of this amount of the money raised by by-law to build bridges over the creek which runs through the city not being spent, as the work was done at less cost than was estimated. As the by-law stated specially that the money raised was for the purpose mentioned above, the unexpended amount cannot be used for any other purpose. The Board of Works will likely apply to the Ontario Legislature for permission to use this money for other public works in the city. Before applying for the legislation the Board will ascertain upon what works the money will be spent, as this will have to be stated when legislation is applied for.

The engineer reported that he had made an arrangement with E. and F. Conroy for filling in with stone at the back of the abutments at the new Smith street bridge at $2.50 per cord. This was work outside the contract, and it was intended to have it done by the city's men. Conditions have made it necessary, however, to have the work done at once, and it was considered advisable to make the agreement with Messrs. Conroy. The arrangements made by the engineer were endorsed by the Board.

C. Kovaliski was heard in reference to the necessity of new sidewalk on the east side of Donegal street, between London and Dublin streets.

On motion of Ald. Duncan and Ald. Graham the engineer was instructed to report on the matter.

Sewer Pipe.

Sewer Construction.

Ald. Metheral moved that the Board of Works recommend to the Council that the city ask for tenders for sewer construction; the engineering department to tender on the work and to do the work if their figure is the lowest.

Ald. Graham seconded the motion.

Ald. Phelan moved an amendment that the work be done by day labour, as it had been for the past three years.

The city engineer said the present system had given good satisfaction.

Ald. Duffus seconded Ald. Phelan's amendment.

The amendment was lost by a vote of 3 to 2, and Ald. Metheral's motion carried.

Electric Signs.

A request from W. J. O'Brien to erect a number of electric signs was referred to the city engineer, who will report to the committee.

Sidewalks Wanted.

Thomas Gunn and others drew attention to the bad condition of a board sidewalk on London street, between Park and Gilchrist streets. They asked that the new sidewalks be built outside the tree line.

It was decided to ask those who signed the notification to petition for a granolithic sidewalk.

Dr. Burnham protested against the building of a granolithic sidewalk on McDonnel street. The city owns half of the property on which the sidewalk will front.

The city solicitor will be asked to look into the matter, and see if the city has authority to build the sidewalk.

It was decided to extend the arm on the stand-pipe near the corner of London and Water streets.

A petition was received for a sidewalk on Dublin street, from Ryerson Ritchie, and it was granted.

It was decided to grant the petition on motion of Ald. Duffus and Ald. Graham.

A petition was received for a granolithic sidewalk on the east side of Aylmer street, from Romaine to Westcott street.

The petition was granted on motion of Ald. Duffus and Duncan.

Mr. McMillan, who resides on Townsend street, waited on the Board and stated that the height of the sidewalk in front of his property kept the water in a low part of his lot and also made it inconvenient to drive into his premises from the street.

The city engineer stated that a

MR. HAROLD CLUXTON,

Tom Sharkey Has Been Having Lovely Dream

New York Telegraph.

We never knew before that Mr. Thomas Sharkey talked in his sleep, or smoked seconds. In speaking in this way about the tattooed Apollo, of Fourteenth street, we are well aware that we are running some risk. And yet, we go on. Mr. Sharkey makes the important announcement that he will fight Jeffries or Johnson. These are the words of the formidable Sharkey: "Be. I will be at the ringside when the Jeffries-Johnson fight is pulled off, and I'm going to get up and challenge the winner of it. They haven't anything on me. I know I can lick Johnson, and it is a question whether Jeffries whipped me decisively."

Mr. Sharkey goes on to say that he is the best man that ever faced Jeffries and that the champion knows it; and he follows it with the information that he is 36 years old and always has taken good care of himself.

Long may he live, but he'll never whip one side of either Johnson or Jeffries, and he never saw the day when he could. At the time Sharkey faced old Bob Fitzsimmons at Coney Island, more than nine years ago, he was in better condition than he has been in his life.

But he was the easiest kind of a mark for Bob. It took the Australian a few minutes to put Thomas to sleep and take the big end of the purse.

Sharkey may be at the ringside, but (1) he will never challenge the winner, and (2) he cannot whip Johnson, and (3) he never stood the ghost of a show with Jeffries. Otherwise what he says is almost so. In conclusion, we have money on deposit that says that Abie Attell can whip Tom Sharkey.

Day Of Rowdy Ball At End

Connie Mack knows baseball and baseball players as well as any of the veterans. He is not given to talking but when he does say anything about the national game it is worth listening to.

"The evolution of the game in the last twenty years is more remarkable in point of patronage than in the way it is played," said Mack recently. "There were marvellous players in the old days and there are marvellous players now. It was a guessing contest between the pitcher and batter in the days of Radbockie and Anson. It is no less a guessing contest in these days of Mullin and Lajoie. It was a battle between the catchers and base runners in the days of Ewing and Hamilton; it is still a battle in the days of Sullivan and Ty Cobb. The fan who believes there are no Clarksons, or Kelleys, or Storeys, or Fergusons, or Fogarths to-day is just as firmly set in his belief as the fan who considers Lajoie, Mathewson, Jose. Kling, Cobb and Crawford greater players than were in the game back in the '80's.

"No argument, no statistics can change the opinion of the fan; then why attempt it? Let's talk about something we can all agree on and that is that the percentage of desirable patrons attending games to-day is vastly larger than it was twenty or twenty-five years ago, and that the rowdyism on the diamond has been so completely eliminated as to be almost an unknown factor to-day.

"The feeling years ago between the rival teams was no less bitter than that between the home crowd and the visiting players. Injuries were often intentionally inflicted, and there was rarely a player on the team who would say a good word of a man on a rival nine. See how all this has been changed! I take my Athletics to Cleveland, for instance, sure of a royal welcome. Sure, too, that our chances for winning are almost, if not quite, as good as if the game were to be played in Philadelphia. A marvellous play by Eddie Collins is cheered as uproariously as if made by Lajoie. It is so practically everywhere now. The old idea—to win at any cost—has given way to the spirit of fair play.

WHAT WILL THE HARVEST BE?

Last year 6,878,000 acres of land in the Canadian West yielded a wheat crop of 147,000,000 bushels. There are under homestead preemption and purchased homesteads entry 44,027,000 acres not yet under crop. When these begin to produce, at the present rate of production—20 bushels to the acre—the total crop will be 880,000,000 bushels. And this will be far short of the possibilities. The surveyed lands in the three provinces, not occupied, but ready for settlement, amount to 145,249,845 acres. At twenty bushels to the acre, the crop from these would be nearly 3,000 million bushels per year, an amount about equal to the present wheat production of the world. These figures seem incredible, but they are based on a simple calculation, which any school boy could make; it is simply multiplying the surveyed area by the known average yield of western wheat lands. But this is not all, the total area of the three provinces is 334,894,320 acres. Deducting thirty per cent. as waste lands, we have remaining a sufficient area to produce, at 20 bushels per acre, if put under crop, the immense total of 4,680 million bushels per year. And this is not all. There is, outside the delimited provinces an area covering many millions of acres declared to be capable of growing wheat. Potentially, therefore, Canada is equipped in the matter of wheat producing area, not only to become the granary of the empire, but, even if all other sources of production should be closed, the granary of the world.

With facts, and the natural and legitimate deductions from them, in mind, it is impossible to forecast the possible future of Canada. With the development of our wheat-growing resources added to the development to a proportionate extent of mineral, forest and other resources; with a population capable of effecting this all-round development imagination quails at the task of anticipating the political, industrial, social, and religious problems that the future presents.

OVER-REACHING CRITICISM.

Hon. Mr. Fielding's broad shoulders have twice come under the lash of the Blue laws. After his visit to Albany, Mr. Haughton Lennox, of South Simcoe, "the watch-dog" of the House and protector-general of national interests, reproachfully interrogated the Minister of Finance, his voice damp with unshed tears, asking if it were true that he, the minister, had talked over tariff matters with President Taft at Albany on Sunday. The minister's reply was a mild but trenchant rebuke to the puritanical, not to say pharisaical officiousness of the inquisitive member. The answer was to the effect that the Minister considered that Sunday was not badly employed in discussing matters that made for "the peace and harmony of two great nations. On Sunday last in Ottawa a minister of the gospel, criticized a Dominion Cabinet Minister severely for discussing, on Sunday at Albany, N.Y., matters pertaining to the tariff question; he named no names, but his reference to the Finance Minister was unmistakable, and he ventured the assertion that "the people of Canada will not approve of that — law makers should not be law breakers." What law did Mr. Fielding, a Canadian law maker break, in Albany?

We all remember the attitude of the Lord of the Sabbath, towards the prototypes of Mr. Lennox and the minister of the gospel referred to, who in old Judaea two thousand years ago reproved our Lord's disciples for plucking ears of corn on the Sabbath day. He did not endorse the reproof, but rather justified the action of his disciples—"the Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath." There is no warrant in Holy Scripture for the puritanical view of the Sabbath day. We are enjoined in the commandments to "remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." This does not necessarily consist in long prayers and long-faced piety. We are told that the seventh day He rested; "wherefore He blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it." —because He rested on that day He hallowed it and for no other expressed reason. Sunday, the Christian variant of the Sabbath day is essentially a day of rest, when by divine command we must rest from our labours. Sunday is devoted to church-going and worship, not necessarily from obligation, but as a matter of convenience. Working on that day would be disobedience to the divine command and there is left leisure for attendance upon public discharge of religious duties. Any incidental action like the plucking of the ears of corn by our disciples, lifting the ox or ass out of the pit or talking over tariff matters in the interests of international peace and harmony, are not pursuance of usual occupations and do not, as incidents, contradict the Scriptural definition of Sabbath observance—rest. No human person will refuse to sympathize with the most reasonably strict observance of the Sabbath day—abstention from the customary toil of the week and rest, according to the divine ordinance.

If we multiply human laws and ordinances to create new sins or crimes by act of parliament and unduly restrict human liberty of action we shall tend to create disrespect for all law. The minister referred to commended the government for its refusal to allow post offices in the west to be opened on Sunday and for the Lord's Day Observance legislation, by which "during three years, 80,000 workmen out of 150,000 had been given Sunday to rest." This is in accordance with the divine law of the Sabbath, a day of rest. The post offices were closed to give employees a day of rest; otherwise the persons who write letters on Sunday—and thereby commit no breach of the Sabbath day unless letter writing is their occupation through the week—would force them to work, and in this would lie the sin. Intemperance works evil whether it be in unwise zeal, in a good cause, or in eating or drinking or sleeping or working. Intemperate use of the best gifts natural or moral, leads to undesirable and, in the end, undesired results.

The unwisdom of undue restrictions, or prohibition, of actions that work nobody harm and are therefore innocent if not beneficent, does not apply to the anti-gambling bill of Mr. Miller which was, for the time being, killed in parliament. That bill sought to restrict personal liberty that was used or rather misused to create a great evil which brought moral deterioration, crime, breach of trust, waste of means and the ruin of men and their homes. There were hardly two opinions in the House regarding the great evil of race track gambling. The Miller bill aimed to minimize, if it would not entirely remove, these evils and that it did not succeed, was not because parliament did not at heart recognize these evils, nor because the overwhelming sentiment of the public did not sympathize with their suppression by law.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

A word ought to be said, remarks the Globe, about the hard and useful work done by the committee that had charge of this matter (the Miller Bill). Mr. Miller proved himself an able and tactful Parliamentarian. The speeches in Parliament were notable features in a campaign of education. Those by men like Mr. Carvell and Mr. J. R. Stratton were politically wise and ethically sound. The weight of argument was distinctly on their side. The debate itself will have a positive effect on public opinion. But in the meantime the things in which the majority are agreed should at once be enacted as a necessary measure of legislation. And it should be done this session.

Hon. Mr. Matheson, Provincial Treasurer, takes a good deal of credit to himself and his Government for the important increase in provincial revenue. Hon. A. G. Mackay, opposition leader, speaking at London on Saturday night, effectively punctured this contention, and showed that the greatest sources of revenue increase were those established by the preceding Liberal Government. He showed that of the $2,600,000 increase in revenue, $2,512,000 was derived from the increase of revenue from sources provided by Liberal Government measures. It was also asserted that, aside from a slight increase in the taxation, of railways, and increase in license fees, the Conservative Government had not enacted a single progressive financial measure.

A Good One on Sir Hibbert.

Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper is telling a story on himself which is causing considerable amusement on the coast. At the time of the recent provincial lections in British Columbia Sr Hibbert found himself unable to accept the railway policy advanced by the Conservative party, of which he has been a lifelong adherent. He finally consented to take the stump against the objectionable policy and spoke in every riding in British Columbia with the exception of Alberni and Esquimalt.

When the returns came in on the night of Nov. 25 it was found that Premier McBride's policy had been endorsed and his candidates returned in every constituency in the province except the two that Sir Hibbert had left out of his itinerary.

Late that night when Sir Hibbert was trying to sleep away his troubles he was aroused to receive the following telegram from the Conservative association at Nelson:

"We unite in thanking you for the invaluable services rendered our party by you in the campaign, and sincerely regret that, owing to insurmountable difficulties, you were unable to appear at Esquimalt or Alberni."

In telling the story, Sir Hibbert says that he appreciated the joke, but could not think of anything in the way of a humorous reply.

Former Aide Married.

The marriage of Capt. Harry Graham and Mrs. Hugh Keith Fraser, whose father is British Minister at Lisbon, interests many Canadians who knew Capt. Graham in the days when he was aide-de-camp to Lord Minto. The people who knew very little about him are familiar with "Ruthless Rhymes for Heartless Homes" and other pleasant ditties. Ottawa people remember him for his cleverness in organizing entertainments and making things pleasant at Rideau Hall. Since those days he has been secretary to Lord Rosebery, and has written numerous volumes. The bride and bridegroom received a number of beautiful presents, and a tremendously fashionable gathering attended the marriage at St. Margaret's, Westminster. Viscountess Errington, who as Lady Ruby Elliot, was married there to Lord Cromer's son, close upon two years ago, was present, but Lady Charles Fitzmaurice,, who was Lad Violet Elliot, has a small baby at home, and is staying quietly at Lansdowne House.

An Utter Wretch.

"Our engagement is broken," admitted the girl, "but I still have a tender feeling for him."

"You might as well cut it out," advised her friend. "He's going around bragging about his lucky escape."

How They Broke Up.

An amusing story is related in "Canadian Savage Folk" of the manner in which an adjournment was taken by a mass meeting. A missionary who had started a school among the Indians met with opposition, and the meeting had been called in support of the rival scheme.

There were several speakers who denounced the school in existance. We replied vigorously, showing the efficiency of the school and denouncing in turn the methods adopted by the opposition. An Indian chief produced some specimens of work done at the school, and several speakers supported the work as it was being done. The climax was reached when a gentleman rose and said:

"I move the whole thing bust!"

The chairman put the motion.

"It is moved and seconded that the whole thing bust!"

The audience sprang to their feet and, waving hats, yelled "Busted!" and made for the door. Thus ended the first and last opposition in that matter.

Record Halibut Catch.

Showing that the halibut of the northern coast of British Columbia are anything but depleted, the steamer King Fisher arrived recently in Vancouver with a catch of two hundred thousand pounds, taken in two days' fishing, a world's record.

Judgment!

Sometimes in selling mutton, too,
As "Regular Reader" sadly notes,
The butcher fails, if the tale is true,
To separate the sheep from the goats.
—Chicago Tribune.

Scriptural Reflection.

The man with the fading fringe of hair in sort of a festoon from ear to ear across the back of his head stood in a store and watched a woman purchasing braids, switches and so forth.

Turning sadly away, he mused:

"Unto her that hath shall be given, but from him that hath not shall be taken even that which he hath."—Life.

A Curious Stone.

A curious stone is the alexandrite. It is a dark green stone that is polished, cut and set, very like a fine topaz or amethyst, in large showy rings surrounded by diamonds. By the light of day the alexandrite has no special beauty save its fine luster, but directly a shaft of artificial light strikes the dull stone deep gleams of red flash out of the green, and under the gas or in the firelight one ignorant of this vagary would instantly pronounce it a ruby.

BERGER TRYING TO SELL NEWS TO THE PAPERS

Jeffries' Manager May Get His Man in Wrong if He Persists in His Tactics of Trying to Charge for Information.

JOURNALS ARE VEXED

If you have had your ear to the ground you must have heard the faint rumblings of the universal howl against the "commercializing" of the big fight.

Some people are old-fashioned enough to believe that the fight ought to be the main thing, and, while there is a money end, these old-fashioned people like to see the sordid side subordinated to the battle itself.

It has remained for smart Sammy Berger to reach the limit in "commercializing" a prize fight. Please spare an eye to the perusal of this wonderful epistle. It is a classic of its kind; it makes history, as it is the first time that a press agent ever demanded money to get his show boosted by the newspapers.

"Within a week, a fortnight at least," writes Berger, "James Jeffries will be settled down to the California training camp. Immediately thereafter I will begin furnishing the press of the United States with daily and weekly letters (mail and telegraphic) covering his training campaign.

"I will have had established in the camp an exclusive and official photographer to take photographs (if my charge (d'you get that? MY CHARGE!) his trainers and distinguished visitors as they arrive.

"It is needless for me to impress upon you the value of data which will be at my command. Assisting me will be a competent corps of writers, artists and photographers, and if you care to handle the matter be good enough to advise me. My rates will will be your rates per column.

"An early reply will be appreciated.

"P. S.—The letters furnished will include signed statements by the principal, his trainers, distinguished sports as they come to camp, and —yours truly, S. B."

Mr. Berger is a very young man, says C. E. Van Loan, the New York sporting writer. He is too young to know that the thing which has made this fight is newspaper publicity. He is too young to know that the man benefitted by newspaper advertising is only too happy to give it away. He is too inexperienced to know that his attempt to coin money out of news meant to advertise "his charge" will be bitterly resented by newspapers and newspaper men. This latest catch-penny device—"my rates will be your rates per column"—is the cheapest, the checkiest and altogether the most asinine move ever made by any man connected with an event dependent upon newspaper advertising for its success.

It seems incredible that a level-headed man like Jim Jeffries should have given his consent to such a piece of imbecility, yet it will be Jeffries who will suffer for this attempt to get money out of the newspapers. Berger is a very small deuce in the Jeffries deck. It is time to drop him under the table.

It will be interesting to see how well Mr. Berger succeeds with his "exclusive and official" staff, though it is not likely that men like Gleason and Rickard will stand for such coarse work.

NECESSARY FOR THE FAMILY

If health is to be maintained there must be at hand in every household a medicine which can be positively relied upon to regulate the liver, kidneys and bowels. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills have proven their right to first place in this regard, and already hold a secure position in the great majority of homes.

Reynolds once forgot the existence of one of his pictures. Burke once obtained a very early work and called on the great artist, submitting the work as that of a young student who sought advice from the master. Reynolds had a long look and then asked, "Is the painter a friend of yours?"

Burke replied in the affirmative.

"Well," replied the great man, "I really don't feel able to give an opinion. It's a cleverish thing, but whether it is of sufficient promise to justify the young man in adopting art as a profession I cannot say."

Sir Joshua had entirely forgotten his own work.—Chambers' Journal.

Chary Charity.

Part of General Booth's great success may be attributed to his splendid ability as a raconteur. Here is a story taken from his large store. Two poor women were talking. One asked the other. "Where did you get that pretty dress for the baby? It's most as good as new." "The rich folks on the corner gave it to me," was the answer. "Why," said the first woman, "I've asked them for help several times, but they always refused me." "Well, you see," explained the other, "I didn't let on it was for my self. I pretended I was collecting cast-off things for the heathen."

A Merited Rebuke.

At the age of eighty-six Mme. Reynolds still found much zest in life, and, having retained all her faculties, she felt that a few of the physical disabilities of her age were of small account and portended nothing. Her nephew Thomas was a man of much worth, but of a certain tactlessness of speech, which always roused the ire of his aunt.

A few weeks before the old lady's eighty-seventh birthday Thomas, who had been overweighted with business cares for years, started on a trip round the world which was to consume two years.

"I've come to say goodby," he announced when he appeared at his aunt's house in a town fifty miles distant from his home. "I'm starting round the world next week, and as I'm to be gone two years and perhaps longer I thought I might not ever—well, you understand, I wanted to be sure to see you once more."

The old lady leaned forward, fixing him with her beadlike eyes.

"Thomas," she said imperatively, "do you mean to tell me the doctor doesn't think you'll live to get back?"—Youth's Companion.

Perpetual Motion.

Little Jimmy had arrived at the questioning age. He had just made an inquiry concerning perpetual motion of his father.

"No," said his father; "nobody has ever discovered perpetual motion yet."

But Jimmy was not quite satisfied. "What is perpetual motion like, dad?" he asked next.

His father thought a moment. "Why, it's pretty hard to say, Jimmy," he replied, "but it's something that keeps going and going forever. Here is an illustration. I once saw a woman in a train who had put on her gloves. She then tried to button her right hand glove, but she found that she must take off her left hand glove to do so. She took it off and buttoned the right hand glove. Then she saw that in order to button her left hand glove she must take off her right hand glove, which she did. Then she put on her left hand glove, buttoned it and put on the right hand one again. But she couldn't button her right hand glove with her left hand glove on, so she took off— That, Jimmy," he said after a pause for breath, "is what perpetual motion would be like if you could get it."

A Remarkable Dinner Service.

The remarkable dinner service made by Josiah Wedgwood for the Russian empress, Catherine II., in 1774 consists of 952 pieces, and on each piece is painted a different view. The body is of a pale brimstone color, and the views are painted in a rich mulberry purple. As the service was intended to be used at the palace of La Grenouillière (meaning marshy place full of frogs), each piece also bears a green frog within a shield on the rim. The views represent British ruined castles, abbeys, parks, bridges, towers, etc. Several pieces are decorated with views of Hampstead, and there are custard cups with views of Richmond and sauce boats with the scenery of Windsor park. In many cases the views are the only pictorial records left of the old buildings. Altogether there are 1,282 views painted on the 952 pieces.—Connoisseur.

What Was Missing.

Dr. Watson (Ian Maclaren) used to tell a story about his trip to the Holy Land, to which he had been looking forward for a number of years with pleasurable anticipation.

As he was nearing the center of historic Palestine he met an American who was making all haste to get away. After such greetings as two English speaking men meeting in a foreign country might exchange the American asked Dr. Watson where he was going.

"To Jerusalem," was the reply.

"Jerusalem!" exclaimed the American in tones of unfeigned disgust. "You don't want to go there. I've just come away. It's a slow town. Why, there isn't a single daily newspaper in the whole place!"

The Flag at Half Mast.

The custom of showing the flag at half mast originated from the way at sea of showing the pre-eminence one ship had over the other in time of warfare. The vanquished always had to lower its flag, while the victor's would be raised as high as possible in exultation. To lower a flag is an act of submission or betoken respect to a superior or is a signal of distress. The hoisting of a flag half mast high came to be used, therefore, as a sign of mourning and respect.

Not Enough to Go Around.

"What are you laughing at, dear?" asked a fond mother of a little four-year-old miss who seemed to be greatly amused.

"Oh, at something funny that happened," was the reply, "but it's no use to tell you, because it isn't funny enough for both of us to laugh at."—Chicago News.

No Satisfying Her.

ASTHMA VANISHES

So Does Catarrh, Croup, Hay Fever and Bronchitis.

Hyomei is a confidence creator. The first time you breathe in this powerful yet soothing, antiseptic air, you will know that it has marvellous curative virtues. There is nothing disagreeable about Hyomei. It is a very pleasant and prompt remedy for catarrh, colds, asthma, croup, bronchitis, etc.

If your head is so stuffed with mucus that you cannot breathe a particle of air through your nostrils, Hyomei will open them up and give relief in five minutes.

Why will sensible people suffer longer, why will they wheeze and hawk and spit and smother, when Wm. Madill will guarantee Hyomei to cure or money back. $1.00 is all Wm. Madill asks for a complete outfit.

"We know Hyomei to be a fine and effective remedy for croup and asthma. Our nine-year-old boy has been greatly troubled with asthmatic croup, and we found no relief for it until we used Hyomei. This remedy does fully all that is claimed for it and we give same our hearty endorsement and have often recommended it.' —Mrs. Isaac Prout, 725 Radbornn St., Woodstock, Ont.

Rubber and Gutta Percha.

There are important distinctions between india rubber and gutta percha, and in the majority of purposes for which they are employed one cannot replace the other. While the trees yielding india rubber are well distributed over the tropical parts of the world and may be cultivated with more or less facility, the tree which furnishes gutta percha is to be found only in Borneo, Sumatra and the Malay archipelago generally.

Alaric the Goth.

Alaric, the first of the barbarian kings who entered and sacked the Eternal City and the first enemy who had appeared before its walls since the time of Hannibal, is said to have received as the price of his departure from the city (during the first siege, in A.D. 408) 5,000 pounds weight of gold, 3,000 pounds weight of silver, 3,000 silken robes, 3,000 pieces of scarlet cloth and 4,000 pounds of pepper. In order to furnish a portion of the ransom it became necessary to melt down some of the statues of the ancient gods.

Pinched on the House.

Jack—I just saw your wife, old man. She was simply stunning. By the way, you're looking rather miserable yourself. What's up?

Tom—Don't get enough nourishment; that's all. You see, I arranged with my wife a month ago to give her a certain amount each week, out of which she was to pay household expenses and buy her clothes.

Under the Old Flag.

What is it that makes the pulse quicken when we see the Union Jack in a foreign land? It certainly is not the hope that at some time, more or less remote, Canadian wheat may have a preference of a few cents a bushel in the markets of the United Kingdom. We all felt the same before anyone ever thought of trade preference as a factor in Empire-building.

And Herself Too.

Mr. Dash, as his young wife posed before the mirror in a decollete gown from the dearest shop in the Rue de la Paix, regarding the pretty little lady indulgently, said, with a sigh:

"You do look nice in that frock, dear, but it cost me a heap of money."

She flung her arms about his neck. "You dear old boy!" she cried. "What do I care for money when it's a question of pleasing you?"

One Way Out.

Perkins had been appointed tutor to the young lord of the manor, and together they were making the grand tour. Perkins was congratulating himself on the excellent behavior of his pupil; but, alas, they had only reached Geneva when his charge fell deeply in love with a pretty Swiss peasant. In vain did he remonstrate with the young lord, pointing out the social barrier that existed between the lovers and the total impossibility of marriage. But all to no purpose. The beautiful Swiss maiden held the young lord's heart captive, and he would scarcely leave her side.

Distracted, Perkins wrote home to the marchioness asking her advice and pointing out her son's infatuation.

A day or two passed in agonizing suspense.

At last the answer came. Perkins breathed a sigh of relief. All his anxiety would now be over. He tore open the envelope, but as he read the letter he groaned in the anguish of his soul. It consisted of three words:

"Marry her yourself."

Poor Bijou!

During the siege of Paris, Francisque Sarcey indignantly protested against the practice of eating dogs. Hunger, however, knows no law, and canine and feline butcher shops were opened in different parts of Paris. Skillfully prepared, properly skinned and cooked, with a good sauce, the dogs proved excellent eating. Their meat was pink and delicate and by no means tough. Canine cutlets were sold at 2 francs each, and a leg of dog might be purchased at double that price a pound.

Two good bourgeois, husband and wife, had a little dog of which they were very fond. But a day came when there was nothing to eat in the house, and poor Bijou had to be killed and cooked. His master and mistress sat down to dinner with tears in their eyes, and during the dinner the latter mechanically placed the tiny rib bones on the side of her plate. "Poor Bijou!" she ejaculated with a sigh. "What a treat these would have been for him!"—Frank Schlosser in Contemporary Review.

A Tearful Eye to Business.

Advertising is nowadays almost a fine art. Clever advertisements attract customers in two ways—first, because they effectually call attention to the goods, and, second, because of their cleverness, pure and simple. Such a one is the following, quoted from London M. A. P., which adorned a boot shop in the Rue d'Amsterdam, in Paris:

LIQUIDATION.

With tears in my eyes, I am obliged to clear the whole of my stock of boots.

To get rid of it all in a week I offer it to you at a loss of 50 per cent.

My husband seeing fit to abandon me with five children.

WHY

Can't I go on without my husband? Because my husband alone was able to obtain job lines from the big provincial and foreign bootmakers.

Prudent ladies will profit by these extraordinarily low prices, which will enable me to clear out my stock and search for my husband throughout Europe.

MME. MARIE-LOUISE X.

Nothing to Say.

According to a delightful story of Shelley, recounted in the International Journal of Ethics by the Rev. Bradley Gilman, the splendid mental equipment of the poet did not include humor. In his characteristically impassioned way, Shelley was deeply interested in the problem of immortality. One day he met a nursemaid wheeling a very young child in a perambulator.

"Here is a little soul," he reflected, "recently come to earth out of the great unknown preceding human life. Perhaps he can tell me something about the great unknown after human life. The two realms may be one and the same."

He accosted the infant twice, but of course gained no response, only a blank infantile stare.

Turn up their toes without delay, & die!

MOTHER AND DAUGHTER SAVED BY GIN PILLS

The Famous Kidney Remedy.

44 Woolfrey Ave., Toronto
March 21st, 1909.

"While engaged as assistant at Sterling Mines, Gray's Siding, Ont., I became familiar with the merits of Gin Pills.

On leaving Toronto, I left my wife (aged 51) and my daughter (aged 21) in poor health. The former had tried all sorts of remedies for her ailment—Middle Age or Change of Life. The joints in her hands were badly swollen and she suffered much pain.

It occurred to me that Gin Pills would help her and so advised her. This was a happy thought, for my wife wrote back to say she was trying Gin Pills.

Her next letter said that the pills were doing her good, and the second, that the swollen joints were fast disappearing. Also, her general health and color was vastly improved. Now, she cannot say too much in favor of Gin Pills. My daughter has also derived much benefit from their use." WM. B. CRAIG.

Simply write to the National Drug & Chemical Co. Dept. B, Toronto, and a free sample will be sent you. When Gin Pills have proved their great value, get them at your dealer—50c a box, 6 for $2.50. 7

THE APRIL STARS

The brightest object in the evening sky is now the beautiful planet Jupiter, which shines out with a steady, golden radiance, a little way above the east point of the horizon. As the hours of the night go on this magnificent object mounts higher in the heavens, irresistibly attracting the attention of the observer as by far the most conspicuous and interesting inhabitant of the sky. The less brilliant, but no less interesting, Saturn, which for many weeks has been sinking lower in the west is now too near the sun to be seen, and on April 16 passes west of that body and so leaves the evening sky. But low in the west the red planet, Mars, which for many weeks has formed a pretty configuration with the Pleiades, still remains with us. It is growing continually fainter, however, and is now much too far away to permit of satisfactory telescope observation.

The planet Mercury, which is always very near the sun, will enter the evening sky on April 5, and running rapidly eastward reach its greatest elongation on May 1st. If the observer has never seen this bright, little object he should not fail to search for it during the last few days of the month, for at the present elongation it will be much more easily seen than usual. The planet at this time is so far to the north and east of the sun that it will not set until more than an hour and a half after sunset. It should be looked for in the twilight glow just after sunset, a little above and to the north of the point of the horizon, at which the sun disappeared. In a small telescope it will be seen to be half full and of a brilliant, silvery white colour.

The April Stars.

Since last month the slow westward motion of the constellations has brought the train of bright winter groups so near the ground that although none of these have entirely disappeared, they occupy a much less conspicuous position than formerly. The Dog Stars are now low in the southwest, the magnificent Orion and Taurus are already partly set and the winter branch of the Milky Way extends all the way along the western horizon form the south to the north. The northern end of the summer branch is just appearing in the northeast, in the middle of which we see the extreme upper end of the beautiful Northern Cross, while nearby is the brilliant blue autumn star Vega, now fairly above the ground.

The Great Dipper, shines out exactly overhead, while nearby there may now be entirely traced out the Mighty Hunter, who, with upstretched arms, drives the Great Bear before him in the ceaseless journey around the Pole. Between the Bear and Virgo is the very delicate little cluster of faint stars known to the Egyptians as the Many Stars and to the Greeks as Ariadne's Hair. Below the Hunter is the little arch of stars known as Ariadne's Crown, of which the brightest star, or pearl of the crown, is a sun of the same type as our own sun, which is receding from us 20 miles a second. The native Australians called this figure the Boomerang. Below the crown of the group is Hercules, remarkable for its great star cluster, which will be easily found at the point C, Figure 1, between the stars D and E, and about one-third of the way from D. It is toward the point F, among the far-distant stars of this constellation that our sun is moving with a velocity of 11 miles a second.

The April Shooting Stars.

If the observer will watch the region about Libra dring the euvenings, from April 12 to 24, he may occasionally see a yellow, slow-moving shooting star move outward from near the point H, Figure 1. Fireballs sometimes occur in this shower. A much richer shower is that of the Lyriads, which is made up of swiftly-moving, bluish, shooting stars darting outward in all directions from the region K, near Vega. These are most numerous from April 20 to 22, but a few may be seen by extended watching on any evening for a week before or after the dates. This stream of particles follows the same path as that of the first comet of 1861. Finally, an equally rich shower may be observed in the early morning hours during the last few days of the month made up of swiftly-moving, shooting stars, which appear to move outward from the star Gamma of the constellation Aquarius. These frequently leave streaks or trails behind them.

Occultations.

On April 13, at 4 hours 33 minutes p.m., the moon passes the planet, Mars, and from much of the earth will be seen to hide that body. To observers in the Eastern States our satellite will appear to nearly graze the planet, the two objects after sunset still being so near together as to form a striking object in a small telescope. In the early evening of April 18, the star M wil be occulted to observers throughout most of the United States, the star as seen at Washington disappearing at 5 hours 25 minutes and reappearing at 6 hours 35 minutes. These times differ greatly, however, for observers at different places.

SCOTT'S FRIENDS.

Mrs. MacCunn's Book Bring Out Many New Stories.

Of the making of books about Scott there is no end. Since Lockhart published his monumental biography the output has been enormous. Apart from purely critical estimates there has been quite a deluge of literature dealing with the many-sided personality of Scott. And now comes Mrs. Florence MacCunn with "Sir Walter Scott's Friends" (Blackwood and Son), a contribution which will take a permanent place in Scott literature.

The work, which must have been a labor of love, is no piece of bookmaking. It is a genuine literature. Nothing would have been easier than with paste or scissors to collect and put together scraps of reminiscences from odd corners relating to Scott, but Mrs. MacCunn had an infinitely higher conception of her task than that. She has gone to original records, which she studied so long and lovingly that the book breathes the very atmosphere of the Scott period.

To understand the relations between Scott and his friends we must note the characteristics of the period. The religious and political distractions of the preceding centuries, and the comparative poverty of the country gave to the society of the eighteenth century a peculiar stamp.

Contact with the literature of England and France gave the higher classes a distaste for the narrow religiosity of their native land. This distaste did not take the form of scepticism. Fundamental religious beliefs were not, as a rule, called in question, but they were held with no great fervor; indeed, in practical life they were replaced by a spirit of sociality tempered with resignation. To these must be added two elements noted by Mrs. MacCunn, "the poverty which scattered families east and west in pursuit of fortune, and the strong family ties which bound the most distant kinsfolk in the bonds of mutual service."

Among the old ladies whom Scott numbered among his friends we find the social, the stoical, and the clannish elements highly developed. Though living in a narrow environment, they breathed the atmosphere of romance. They were great storytellers and dealt much in omens, superstitions, family traditions, and family tragedies. So well had Scott assimilated the conversations of his friends that when the Waverley Novels appeared the old ladies had no doubt of the authorship.

One of them, Mrs. Keith, detected in them stories she had told Scott. She used to say: "Should I no' ken my ain groats in anither man's kail?" The equality of sociability was highly developed in Scott, and it is, therefore, little wonder that he found himself in his element in Edinburgh, which still in his time retained its position as the centre of light and leading.

Law, literature, and the Church attracted brilliant young men, and among them Scott found congenial company. Mrs. MacCunn gives us some delightful pictures of Scott's friends. There was John Clerk of Penicuik, with his craze for antiquarian research. The family hobby served as the family joke for three generations of Clerks. John Clerk, the oldest son, used to model heads and medals, mutilate them, bury them in likely places, and leave them to be dug up and identified by his father.

A Bull on the Loose.

The cantrips of a self-willed bull, which was bent upon having its own way in opposition to the will of the drover, caused some amusement in a central thoroughfare in Dundee, Scotland, recently. The animal was being driven to the cattle market, and was evidently determined to have one glorious hour of life before quitting this world. Just as it neared a well-known public-house the bull made a sudden dash for the entrance to the house of call, and, forcing open the swing doors, burst in upon the astonished waiters. He certainly was not the type of customer they were accustomed to deal with, and they were at a loss as to how to please him. Ultimately, however, by means of gentle suasion they managed to get him outside the door, and it is a significant fact that almost immediately upon regaining the street the animal collapsed, and could not be induced to get to his feet. A float had to be requisitioned, and in it he was carried without further mishap to his destination.

There was some discussion as to where the sidewalk gang should start work. Ald. Duffus and Phelan moved that it be on the south end of the city, and Ald. Duncan and Ald. Graham moved that the first work be done on the south side of Charlotte streets, west of Park street. The latter resolution carried.

THE ANNUAL BANQUET OF THE TENNIS ASSOCIATION

Most Successful Affair Was Held in the National Hotel Last Evening-----Trophies Presented and Many Bright Speeches Were Made.

The anual banquet of the Peterborough Lawn Tennis Club was held last evening in the National Hotel. The officers for the coming season were elected and the presentations of the cups for the single and double tournament were made. Supper was served from half past eight to nine, after which an interesting programme was run off. Mr. W. H. Cluxton, president of the association, occupied the chair.

Mr H.. B. Collier, Secretary.

Gentlemen, I must congratulate the club on the successful year, the initial year of our club, that we have spent together. Although I have no great balance on hand I must say that we had an excellent season and there is every prospect for a better one this year.

Mr. Collier gave an itemized account of the money for the past year.

President Cluxton.

Gentlemen, I wish to say a few words in regard to the association. I must say a year ago the cup of trouble was at my lips, but to my joy I say I can now drink to the success of the organization. Since 1899 I have been interested in the best game to develop the young man, both physically and mentally, namely, tennis. (Applause.) The year following went from bad to worse and not until 1908 did things revive. Tennis, without a doubt, is the best summer sport for the young men of Peterborough. I must congratulate Mr. Kerr on being successful in winning the single tournament thus obtaining the cup. I propose that we strive to make Peterborough the headquarters for the tennis of Canada. I thank you, gentlemen, for turning out this evening, and hope you spend more social evenings together in the future than we have in the past.

Vice-Pres. Mr. F. D. Kerr.

Mr. F. D Kerr, Vice-Pres., presented his trophy to the Y.M.C.A. club, the successful competitors for 1909. In doing so he remarked: "It gives me great pleasure to be with you to-night, gentlemen and also to have the opportunity of wishing the association every success during the coming season. The qualities that are required to make a good tennis player, namely, endurance, mental efforts, good temper, and activity helps to make the business man of to-morrow. Tennis is a game which was discovered in the middle ages, Charles the eleventh of France played it and Shakespeare speaks of it in his work in the line, "When we have watched our rackets to the balls," which goes to show the game was played for many centuries back. The recognized game of the day took its modern form in the year 1874. In 1877 championship tournaments were established in which games, fair play and honesty were the predominating characteristics. I now ask Dr. MacPherson, as the leading player on the Y.M.C.A. team, and as a distinguished athlete, to accept this trophy on behalf of the Y. M. C. A. team. (Chorus of "He's a jolly good felow."

Dr. MacPherson said in part: "We have a great deal to be thankful for to Mr Kerr, but especially for his active work in tennis, which he fostered in thit city. I have much pleasure in congratulating the officers for their successful work of the past season.

The Association Cup for the single tournament was presented by the President to Mr. Kerr.

Mr. Kerr made a suitable reply, and assured the members that he would always keep it before him, that it might remind him that he could once run. (Chorus, "He's a Jolly Good Fellow").

Mr. W. Coleman, in his song, was assisted by the members in the chorus.

Mr. Burnett proposed the Toast to the Officers.

Gentlemen, I feel much honoured to be present at the annual meeting. I think lawn tennis is an ideal sport, and if a man plays according to the recognized rules he will be both physically and mentally developed. Great credit is due our President, who was instrumental in bringing about the formation of this association. Next to him is our Secretary-Treasurer, who alone knows what time it took to carry out the work. In such a position there is generally more work than credit. The managers of the various teams are to be congratulated on the manner in which they conducted the games. Our Hon. President, Mr. Larmouth, proved himself an excellent promoter, and a good sport. I ask you to fill your glasses and drink to the health of last year's officers.

Mr. Wallace Wood

In reply, said, the work of the initial year cannot be over estimated, and the Association was very ably looked after by the officers. Particular stress should be laid on the friendly feeling which existed between the clubs. I congratulate you, gentlemen, on behalf of the West End Lawn Tennis Club.

Mr. R. J. Devey proposed the toast to the Ladies, remarking that tennis without ladies, was similar to soda water without a fizz. (Applause). "In this city," said Mr. Devey, "we should have a ladies' single and double tournament."

Election of Officers.

The election of officers resulted as follows:

Hon. Pres.—F. D. Kerr.
Pres.—H. Cluxton.
Vice Pres.—H. D. Burnett.
Secretary—H. B. Collier.
Treasurer—W. Wood.
Manager of outside matches—S. T. Medd.
Manager of Ladies' Association—R. J. Devey.

Vote of Thanks to Entertainers.

A vote of thanks to Mr. Denison proprietor of the National, his son, who is an enthusiastic tennis player, and the young ladies who attended to the serving, was passed, and Mr. H. B. Collier made a suitable reply.

Mr. Wood asked that the managers hand the money to the Treasurer as soon as possible.

Mr. Collier, secretary for the coming year, requested the names of the representatives of each team to be handed to him.

The singing of the National Anthem concluded the evening's programme

A DELIGHTFUL COMEDY BY COLLEGIATE PUPILS

"Mr. Bob," a Laughable Two Act Farce Comedy Presented With Success to a Large Audience in the Assembly Hall Last Night--All the Cast Did Very Meritorious Work.

Artistically and financially the presentation of the hilarious comedy "Mr. Bob," by the pupils of the Collegiate Institute, in the assembly room of the school, last evening, was a distinct triumph. The smoothness with which the production was given demonstrated in no uncertain manner that the Collegiate Institute possesses a very high average of amateur talent, and the student body is to be congratulated upon having in its midst such clever young people. The interest taken in the work of the pupils was shown by the huge audience which attended, the accommodation of the spacious hall being taxed to its utmost, and the enjoyment of those present was unmistakably indicated by the continuous laughter and applause, which ran through the audience, and was a constant accompaniment to the performance.

The pupils taking part are to be congratulated first upon their excellent choice of a vehicle for their entertainment, and secondly, upon the splendid manner in which they staged the production. A more suitable playlet for such a purpose could not have been selected. "Mr. Bob" is a delightful little comedy, full of humorous complications and absurd situations, hinged, of course, upon the inevitable basis of mistaken identity, with bright and witty lines, and with no dramatic climaxes that are liable to make too exacting demands upon the ability of young artists. At the same time it affords many opportunities for bright work, and it may be said that last night's cast took full advantage of the openings offered. The result was a very funny and wholly pleasing presentation, the success of which reflects the greatest credit upon those taking part.

Space does not permit of a synopsis of the action, but it is sufficient, perhaps, to say that the story revolves around a series of ridiculous mixups, in which everybody is taken for everybody else, with most amusing results. Things are in a bad tangle for a while, but, eventually, everything is smoothed out and the ending is of the usual happy variety.

The company of seven is to be warmly praised upon the ease and finish with which they presented the little farce. Especially are the members to be commended for the clearness of their enunciation. Usually with embryo dramatic companies the leaden weight of self consciousness leads the average inexperienced actor to indistinct articulation that is sometimes almost painful in its effect upon the audience, but there was nothing of that in evidence last night. The lines were given clearly and distinctly so that those at the rear of the hall had not the slightest difficulty in following the dialogue. The work of the Philomathean Society, in developing a spirit of self-confidence in its members so that they are at ease before the public was never more clearly demonstrated than by the work of the cast last night. The players seemed to have grasped the purpose and meaning of the lines, and gave an intelligent and artistic characterization of the farce.

Miss Myra White as "Katharine," appeared perfectly at home in the part, and gave a splendid interpretation, free from the slightest symptom of stage fright. Miss Maisie Armstrong had the role of Miss Bryant, otherwise "Mr. Bob," and her work throughout was finished and clever. Miss Gertrude Yenney, as Aunt Becky, a lady whose strong friendship for Celines has much to do with the action of the comedy, was sincere and effective in her methods, and got the most out of the part. Miss Margery Mann gave a bright character sketch of Peggy, a stage-struck house maid, whose histrionic ambitions were responsible for much amusement. Mr. Roy Dixon handled the role of Philip, the young college graduate, with a dashing assurance and confidence that was remarkable considering that it was his first appearnce in such a part. He showed confidence and poise and his work throughout was of superior calibre. Mr. John Harstone was cast as a law clerk, with the facility to get mistaken for someone else, and this part, a splendid comedy one, was thoroughly looked after by Mr. Harstone. Mr. Alex. Primeau gave a most creditable characterization of the part of Jenkins, the pompous butler, his accent and his acting being alike meritorious.

The production was excellently staged and was seen in two acts, the scene in each case being the same. The stage was effectively and artistically arranged, and the presentation went through without an untoward incident to mar the success of the evening.

The Collegiate Institute orchestra which, by the way, continues to show marked improvement on its every appearance, added to the enjoyment of the occasion by several numbers, and the audience was generous in its applause. The organization, the membership of which is confined solely to pupils of the Collegiate, is a credit to the school.

The Collegiate Institute pupils are indeed to be congratulated upon the success of their efforts and it was pleasing to see their enterprise recognized and approved of by such a splendid audience.

Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Pettit who have been training the pupils, deserve credid for their success. Mrs. Pettit was presented with a beautiful floral tribute during the evening and the presentation was greeted with loud applause.

The cast was as follows:

Miss Rebecca Luke—Miss Gertrude Yenney.
Philip Royson, her nephew — Roy Dickson.
Catherine Rogers, her niece—Myra White.
Robert Brown, law clerk — John Harstone.
Marion Bryant, "Mr. Bob"—Maisie Armstrong.
Patty the maid—Marjorie Mann.
Jenkins, the butler—Alex. Primeau.

Enjoyable Entertainment At Knox Church Drew A Large Crowd

The auditorium of Knox Church was filled to the doors last evening on the occasion of a very enjoyable Shredded Wheat banquet, held on the third anniversary of the church. Supper was served from six o'clock until 8.30, and the genial and courteous waitresses were kept busy attending to the wants of the guests. The menu was a choice one and was thoroughly enjoyed by all present. Every course provided shredded wheat in some different form, and it was shown that it was a very palatable food. The banquet was given by the Canadian Shredded Wheat Co., L't'd., and the affair was held under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid of the church. After the large gathering had partaken of the excellent spread provided, a programme of rare interest was presented. The feature of the evening was the address by Rev. A. Logan Geggie, pastor of Parkdale Presbyterian Church, Toronto, on "Wit and Humour". Mr. Geggie is an exceedingly interesting speaker, and by his very humorous remarks, kept his audience in a very happy mood.

Mr. Geggie in the course of his remarks, stated that humour held an important place in human nature. He thought a man suffered a great loss who had not the sense of humour. He pointed out what a great faculty it was for a man to possess. He contrasted the gift of humour in persons of various countries. The Scotch, he believed, had the truest sense of humour, It had been gained as the result of the hardest experience, and was therefore truer than in the other countries.

Rev. W. C. Riddiford and Rev. J. G. Potter in neat and appropriate speeches, conveyed greetings from their respective churches

Rev. Dr. Langfeldt, rector of St. Luke's church, was also present, and joined in a few remarks of congratulation, to the ladies of the church on the success of the evening's entertainment. He also congratulated the church on its attaining the third anniversary. During the evening musical numbers were given by the church orchestra, Miss C. Chiles contributing a solo on the piano, a Scotch selection by the male quartette was also given. An address on "Natural Food" was given by Mr. J. Hewitt. Mr. Hazeldine, of Toronto, assisted in the entertainment.

A School For Education Of Public Librarians

The following from the Montreal Witness will be read with interest by the applicants for the position of public librarian at Peterborough:

McGill University will open its Seventh Summer Library School on Monday, June 20th. The course will last exactly four weeks.

The object is two-fold, viz.: To aid librarians of small libraries and library assistants to study those technical subjects without the knowledge of which no librarian can make even the smallest library as influential and as useful as it ought to be, and also to give the students a broader view of what the library should stand for in the community.

The principal courses of study will be (a) Classification, based on Cutter's Expansive Classification, with practice work on selected books; (b) Cataloguing (the preparation of a dictionary catalogue on cards), including the various forms of author entry, title and subject entry, analytics and references (c) discussion of books used in reference work with problems; (d) the principles of book selection, with problems. Other topics such as binding, library buildings, travelling libraries, and work with schools and children, will receive attention. Anyone who holds a library position or appointment will be admitted without examination. The course will prove valuable, not alone to actual librarians, but as an introduction to more extended study by those who contemplat taking up library work.

THE VESTRY MEETING OF ST. JOHN'S HELD LAST NIGHT

Officials for the Year Selected---Reports Read From the Different Societies Indicate That Year Has Been a Successful One.

The adjourned vestry meeting of St. John's church was held last evening in St. John's school house, with Rev. J. C. Davidson presiding. The different societies presented reports, which showed a decided increase in the finances.

Th King's Daughters returned a sum of $89.58 as the proceeds of the tea rooms. The present balance amounted to $48.20. The Chancel Guild had on hand a balance of $48.97, which will go towards putting in a new hardwood floor in the chancel. This Guild has been doing progressive work under the presidency of Mrs. Rush. The Girls' Auxiliary under the leadership of Miss L. Hall, has been doing splendid work for missions outside the city parish. The expenditure has reduced the treasury to $2.27. The average attendance of the members of the choir for the past year was thirty-six. Fifty out of fifty-two frequently attended.

Fifty dollars has been invested in new hymn books. The Women's Auxiliary, consisting of sixty-seven members, of which Mrs. P. Campbell succeeded Mrs. Palmer as president, has been distributing money, clothes, and food to the poor throughout the parish.

Two classes in ambulance work, under the direction of Dr. Cameron, have been engaged in the study of this subject.

The boys brotherhood was represented by Kenneth Brown, who informed the gathering that they were frequently visiting the young members of the church and in a short time they will greatly increase in numbers.

After the reports a splendid one by Mr. J. Mills, retiring warden, was given, detailing all the work done in the past year.

The sheds facing Brock St. have been removed and that frontage is the prettiest part of the property. The lawn will be greatly improved when the contemplated flower beds are planted.

New lights will take the place of the small sixteen candle power lamps. The upper vestry has been furnished and new linoleum carpet has been laid.

Mr. E. Jay gave an American organ for use there. Twenty dollars has been spent in furnishing prayer and hymn books for strangers. Mr. Mills strongly advised the congregation to provide themselves with prayer books. The envelope system was introduced last year and a great increase in the finances was found. For outside fixtures on the church $206 had been spent. The Ladies' Auxiliaries have looked after the sick. The Rectory Committee reported to Mr. P. Campbell that the rectory was now complete. They also informed Mr. Campbell of a floating liability of $230 on the ground improvements. One thousand dollars was paid on the mortgage debt on the church, five hundred from the Easter offertory and five hundred from the current account. The warden recommended that fifty dollars be granted for extra services and that coal should be bought. This was considered. Among other suggestions Mr. Mills asked the congregation to consider the idea of free pews.

only free at 1 lo'clock service. The last recommendation was that of the "chimes." Five subscriptions have already been given, amounting to $245. If the chimes are obtained they will be used for public occasions whether they are sorrowful, joyous, or patriotic. The chimes would be installed in November of this year. The total cost will amount to $1,250. Mr. Alex. Elliott headed the list with a subscription of $100. A committee, with Mr. Elliott, will undertake the business of buying the chimes.

Mr. Mills concluded his report by wishing the Warden every success.

Rev. J. C. Davidson's Report.

The increase in the number of communicants is as follows: 1908, 3,107; 1909, 3,345; 1910, 3,554. Easter communions, as follows: 1907, 407; 1908, 441; 1909, 437; 1910, 445.

Rev. Mr. Davidson expressed his desire to have the communicants increased from forty a week to one hundred.

Thirty-seven baptisms, twenty-nine confirmations, eighteen marriages and thirteen burials have taken place in the past year.

Forty-seven sermons have been preached in the past year, though it is rather hard sometimes to arrange them. This policy will be carried out. The rector in conclusion paid a warm tribute to the warden. "In my opinion Mr. Mills has been a faithful servant in his two years of labour," remarked Canon Davidson. Few congregations have attained such a high standard. The St. John's church is a landmark in Peterborough, it being erected when the population was but five hundred. The church has hallowed memories of seventy-five years and many faithful parishioners have passed to their eternal reward.

Mr. Davidson pressed the congregation to work for the welfare of the souls of God's people.

The rector appointed Mr. W. F. Johnston his warden, while the choice of the people for warden was Mr. A. E. Coulthard. The financial statement showed a balance of $423.68.

The very efficient choir master, Mr. Devey, was voted an honorarium of $50. This was unanimous.

The following sidesmen were appointed: Joseph Mills, R. J. H. Mitchell, R. Fair, P. Campbell, A. H. Stratton, W. R. Morris, H. D. Burnett, T. H. Mulholland, D. Hughes-Charles, J. J. Howden, W. H. Cluxton, G. A. Smith, G. A. Wainwright, F. D. Kerr.

The following ushers were appointed: W. E. Conway, J. F. Linton, Jas. S. Bell, Wm. Ackerman, C. G. Graham, Stanley W. Canniff, Geo. H. Armstrong, W. Mills, Matthew Drysdale, Walter Hooper, Donald McKee, Dr. Holloway, W. H. Roberts, Jr., Chas. E. Coleman, C. V. A. Mitchell, Bruce Mills.

The Advisory Board is composed of Joseph Mills, R. H. Mitchell, Dr. Boucher, Dr. Burnham, R. Fair, P. Campbell, W. F. Conway, Dr. Halliday, H. W. Morphet, J. J. Howden, J. F. Linton, A. H. Stratton, R. Ruddy, W H. Cluxton, J. H. McClellan, Wm. Hinchliffe, Geo. A. Smith.

EXCITING RUNAWAY

An exciting runaway took place this afternoon about 3.15, when one of Robert Gibbs' livery horses thought it was at the "Woodbine," and tore along Aylmer St.. When it passed Simcoe St., which was the half way place, it had little harness on it. It was finally stopped at Brock St. and remained tied to a post till the owner came.

HASTINGS NEWS NOTES

Examiner Special.

Hastings, April 11. — We regret to chronicle the demise of Mrs. John Scriver, who passed away on Wednesday last, after a lingering and painful illness, due to cancer. She leaves to mourn her loss, besides her husband, two sons and three daughters. Interment took place on Friday, in the Trent Valley cemetery. The sympathy of all is extended to the bereaved ones.

Over 300 persons sat down to the shredded wheat banquet, which was given under the auspices of the Presbyterian Church here and every one is loud in their praises of the way in which the different courses were served. The concert, which followed, was highly entertaining and the ladies who had charge are to be congratulated on the success which attended their efforts.

Miss Blanche Humphries has been visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. Humphries.

At a well-attended meeting of the lovers of sport, held last week, the report of the past year was received and the following officers elected for the ensuing year. T. Howard, Pres.; F. Hubbs, S. Treas.; with an executive committee, composed of several of the citizens.

While a number of carpenters were at work on the boarding-house, which is being built for the Italians, the scaffold gave way and six of them dropped to the ground. One was unfortunate enough to have his nose broken, and another is suffering from a sprained ankle. The others escaped without serious injury.

The dredge has been at work during the past week putting forth strenuous efforts to remove the floating islands, which came down last Spring.

Mr. Frank Gilders had a rather unpleasant experience one day during the past week, while engaged at work on the "Maple Leaf," his feet becoming entangled with a running line, and causing him to fall overboard. He was soon rescued from his perilous position, however, not much the worse for the experience, but resolved to try some job on terra firma.

At a recent meeting of the Council it was decided to have all trees hanging over the sidewalks trimmed and also to forbid the habit of wheeling on the sidewalks and ball-playing on the public streets.

Mr. J. Coughlin has disposed of his milk business to Mr. H. Richardson, of town, as he intends trying his fortune in the far West.

The new cheese factory is in course of construction and is expected to be ready in good time for the season's operations.

Mr. S. Hatherley is off on a trip to the West.

Several of our citizens attended the "Temple of Fame," given by the Methodist Church of Norwood on Friday evening last, and were delighted with the evening's entertainment. The different characters were well personated and each and every one carried their individual numbers through with apparent ease.

Miss Ellen Beavis and Miss Mabel Christie of Peterborough, and Miss L. Buxton, of Toronto, were guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Beavis, during the past week.

Messrs. H. Wilson and E. Valleau left last week for a trip to western Canada with the intention of locating

Mr. Harry Wilson, of town, has been transferred from Bracebridge to the Bank of Ottawa staff at Winnipeg.

Mr. J. Thomson, of Wheatley, is the guest of his parents, Rev. D. A. and Mrs. Thomson.

The Rev. Mr. Tucker, of Norwood, occupied the pulipt of the Methodist church at both services on Sunday last preaching educational sermons, while Rev. C. W. Barrett did similar work at Norwood.

We are sorry to say that Mr. Robt. Johnston is still in a critical condition, suffering from paralysis.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Graham and family left last week to take up their abode in the West.

Animal Vanity.

In a small town in Jersey there is a corner grocery where you may buy anything from a twenty foot ladder to a pearl necklace. Adhesive plaster, sauerkraut and toilet articles are also sold, and in case of necessity you may get a hair cut or a horse shod in the back yard. Some time since a farmer stopped in the store to get some horse liniment to rub the rheumatism out of a sick cow, and two or three days later he came back with a life sized kick.

"Look here, Abner," he complainingly remarked, "I wish ye would be a leetle might more keerful how ye throw yerself back o' thet counter. T'other day ye give me cologne instead o' hoss liniment, and gosh dast if I didn't put it on thet sick cow afore I found out what it was."

"It didn't hurt her any, did it?" broke in the groceryman.

"Can't say thet it did," answered the farmer, "but ever sence she has had thet sweet smellin' stuff on her she hain't done a derned thing but jes' look at her reflection in ther duck pond an' sigh."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

Bringing Him to Time.

"I made her father toe the mark,"
Said Percy. "His fair daughter
Should never have a beau, he said,
But still I fondly sought her.
And last night in the dewy dusk
He found me wooing. Mercy!
That's when I made him toe the mark.
I was the mark!" sighed Percy.
—Nixon Waterman.

Identified.

The new housemaid had just opened the door in response to Wigglesby's ring.

"Is Miss Darborough in?" asked Wigglesby.

"Yis, sorr, she's in, sorr, but she's engaged," said the maid.

"Yes, I know," smiled Wigglesby. "I'm what she's engaged to."—Harper's Weekly.

Rejected Manuscript.

"A penny for your thoughts,"
The postman says.
The downcast bard gulps rather hard
And sadly pays.
And it is quite enough
To make one blue
To see a pack of thoughts come back
With postage due.
—Louisville Courier-Journal.

In the Present.

"And before I accepted him," Miss Passay was saying, "I asked him if he would love me when I was old."

"The idea!" exclaimed Miss Bright. "Why, if he proposed to you he had already proved that, hadn't he?"—Catholic Standard and Times.

Suspended Commiseration.

My creed of compassion has piously stood
For the fellow who couldn't make good if he would,
But my sympathies cease, as all sympathies should,
For the lobster who wouldn't make good if he could.
—Puck.

Exactness.

"So your little girl objects to saying 'Now I lay me down to sleep?'"

"Yes; she is a truthful child, and we have been living in a room near an elevated railway in New York where nobody could sleep."—Washington Star.

The Admirable Korean.

With all his languor, the Korean is a particularly agreeable person. He is the polished gentleman in the setting of the savage. He is one of nature's cheerful spirits—a Mark Tapley who goes whistling through life despite the multiplication of his misfortunes. He is the victim of his own good nature and is content to sit unconcernedly on his boundary fence and witness the robbery of his estates. It is a pleasure to visit Korea if only to meet the Korean himself, says the Japan Weekly Chronicle, for he is the happy-go-lucky, good tempered simpleton who unconsciously contributes to the pleasure of others.
